"In what branch of science does he seem to be particularly interested?"

"He isn't interested in science at all; but the other day a friend of mine who has a big automobile left the machine standing in front of my house for more than half an hour, and, although the boy was playing around outside all the time he did not once climb into the automobile or even toot the horn."

Minnesota Farmer

What He Is Doing and Saying—News of the State Farm School.

Corn vs Oats.

The average yield of corn in Minnesota, for ten years, has been approximately 30 bushels per acre. The average yield of oats in the state, for the same ten years, has been approximately 32 bushels per acre. Comparing these two crops by bushels of yield is not a true comparison from a feeder's standpoint. Thirty-two bushels of oats weigh, in round numbers, 1,000 pounds. Thirty bushels of shelled corn weigh, in round numbers, 1,600 pounds.

Comparing these feeds with bran at $20.00 per ton, the acre yield of oats, 1,000 pounds, is worth $9.50; while the acre yield of corn, 1,600 pounds, is worth $17.36. The cost of production of these two crops in Minnesota is, including rent, $10.44 per acre, for corn husked from standing stalk, and $8.86 per acre for oats, thus leaving a profit of $0.61 from the oat crop and $6.92 from the corn crop.

The above facts make it evident that a greater acreage of corn is warranted in Minnesota. Results of the past few years have shown that Minnesota is in the corn belt, and that by the use of varieties adapted to this location, yields of corn above the average of the best corn states may be expected. This is, of course, based on the supposition that good seed is put upon a well prepared soil and given good care. The reason the average yield per acre for the state is less than 30 bushels is because too many are satisfied to produce less than an average yield. Let us have more bushels per acre and more acres.

Poison Cure for Potato Scab.

Don't plant potatoes on land on which scabby crops have been raised previously. If seed to be used is scabby it should be treated as follows: Dissolve two ounces of corrosive sublimate in fifteen gallons of water, and before cutting put the potatoes in it for an hour and a half. Remove, cut, and plant, or spread out to dry. Corrosive sublimate is a deadly internal poison and should not be left where animals or poultry can drink it, nor should any of the treated potatoes be eaten by animals or human beings. Use wooden vessels, not metal. The solution may be used as long as it lasts. Keep treated potatoes out of and away from bags, baskets or other receptacles in which scabby potatoes have been. Formaldehyde, a less dangerous chemical than corrosive sublimate, and therefore a little more satisfactory, may be used instead. Mix one pound (one pint) of commercial formaldehyde (40 per cent) with thirty gallons of water in which potatoes should be immersed for two hours. Placing potatoes to be treated in a gunny sack and then immersing them in the solution will be found a very convenient way of handling them.

Potatoes vs Corn.

In some localities in Minnesota hardly adapted to corn raising experiments show that the potato crop is well adapted to many large areas, as a money maker, and can be used in place of corn as a cleaning crop in rotation. The production of seed potatoes in the state is becoming an established industry, and many other communities can profitably take up the work. The potato crop offers one of the best propositions for a community of interests, whereby the neighboring farmers can individually raise a small acreage of a single variety and market them as of one man in large quantities, whereby they will bring a better price than the same number of bushels of several varieties marketed individually. Community of interest is adopted by the great industrial concerns and prosperity comes to them. Why shall not the farmers co-operate and do business as a single man?

Domestic Science.

Domestic science according to Miss Shepperd, chief of the Domestic Science division, at the State Experiment Station, is that part of a girl's education which specially prepares her for a home maker and renders her a constant dispenser of good cheer. The object of the science is to promote universal good health and banish drudgery from the house, to do which the girls must be led to constantly apply the facts given in educational lines to special home needs, whereby home duties can be raised from irksome tasks to pleasant occupations and interesting experiments. Domestic science shows the evil effects which result from improper habits of life in the matter of food and drink, and shows the ideal home conditions. It shows the processes of breadmaking, the spoiling of food, the possible prevention of disease, etc., and impresses the fact that the place to apply the principles learned at the University Farm is in the home.

DUST FROM THE SOIL.

Every Minnesota farmer is entitled to have his name placed on the Extension Division mailing list and to receive regularly the Farmers' Library. No one should be negligent about requesting that the Library be sent. He should provide means for preserving the Library for future reference, for it will be full of useful hints and suggestions which will prove valuable at any season of the year.

The object of drainage is to prevent water standing on the fields. In excavating care should be had to not lower the low places nor leave the ridges too high. Water itself makes a good level, and any intelligent farmer can begin to drain his field at the lowest point and as he excavates the water will run off. Many other unproductive fields can be reclaimed in this way. The careful plowing of dead furrows leading into the main drain will afford excellent help in taking water from a field. Even ordinary plowing with the furrows running toward the low places will go a long ways towards carrying off the water.

"Little drops of water, little grains of sand," etc., was never more practically illustrated than at the Minnesota Experiment Station in the breeding of wheat. Here, from one kernel of wheat planted in 1892, this "little grain" has grown until its progeny covers more than half a million acres of Minnesota soil and has attracted wheat growers in other states and nations. It is known as Minnesota No. 169. A shipment of this wheat has just been made from the Experiment Station to South Africa for seed.

Farmers' Library No. 3 is ready for distribution and is being forwarded to all those whose names have been requested to be placed on the mailing list. All other residents of the state who wish to receive this literature are requested to send their names at once so that back numbers of the Library may be sent before the several editions are exhausted. Bulletin No. 3 gives detailed information regarding the state industrial contest for Minnesota boys and girls.

A. P. Nelson, of Maynard, has found by experience in operating a grain farm that where scarcely a dozen cattle could be supported on the farm by the old hit-or-miss method of farming, by rotation of crops, he can now easily keep half a hundred cattle, supporting them on the otherwise waste products of his farm without in the least decreasing the total yield of grain.

The way to get a good, fast walking team is to not over-load and not trot them. Two 1,200-pound horses, on a 14 or 16-inch plow are over-loaded. They are loaded too heavily to walk three miles an hour. Three horses on the same plow will make the work lighter and reduce the cost of plowing.

Sow fodder corn thickly, either with a grain drill or corn planter, at the rate of 30 to 50 pounds per acre, cultivate one way, cut with a corn binder, shock in the field; allow to stand until fed or hauled to the barn.

The Best Way.—There is always a best way of doing things on the farm, but it often takes study to find it. The result is worth the effort. If some one else is getting better results than you are, find the reason.

A Short Course for steam and gasoline engineering will begin at University Farm on May 4th and continue until the 17th of June. Tuition, $15,00, board, $3.50 a week.

It will not cost the farmer more than ten cents an acre to select out of his wheat bin the plumpest and heaviest kernels for seed. He will then improve his crop and yield.

Pasture and hay crops are very easily and cheaply grown, and in addition to the value of the crops is the valuable effect such crops have on the soil and its productiveness.

In selecting a brood sow it is important that the number of pigs she farrows, the number she raises, and her attitude toward them be determined before purchasing.

Prof. Haecker, who is international authority on dairying, estimates the feeding value of a ton of fodder corn at $4.90 as compared with a ton of timothy hay at $6.00.

The Most Valuable Farms were at one time sloughs and swamps and considered worthless. Drainage has made them what they are now—valuable.

Lawn Clipping.—If no other and better means for keeping the lawn clipped be at hand the horses or sheep will be of great service in doing it.

A mixture of a little salt, charcoal, ashes and air slacked lime has a good effect upon parasites of the digestive system of either young or old pigs.

Pleasant surroundings and modern conveniences, easily obtainable, will go a long way in keeping the boys and girls on the farm.

Isolation, hard work and small compensation is too often the lot of the farmers' wives. These are burdens that need lifting.

The Most Economic way of securing a permanent road bed is through drainage. It solves much of the good roads problem.

Farmers' homes may be provided with many of the modern conveniences that city people enjoy.

The orchard is a splendid place for poultry to range in. Poultry is a very good insect destroyer.

Place the hog pens a good distance from the house. Odors from such pens are not agreeable.

Plant trees this spring to protect from wind and shut out undesirable views.

The Dairy division of the Department of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park has recently sold two of the best bred Jersey bulls on the farm, one to John N. Tidd, of Meadowlands, St. Louis county, who took Tubal of Lily Dale, whose grand dam has a record of 456 pounds of butter a year, and his dam a record of about 400.

Potato growers should follow a system of rotation in which potatoes follow clover on a carefully prepared seed bed.

Soil that has produced a crop of scabby potatoes should be used for some other crop for several years because the scab spores live over in the soil and will attack subsequent potato crops for five or six years afterward. For potatoes select, if possible, a northern slope, since the crop will suffer less on such slope during hot, dry weather.

A potent reason for retaining old sows is that they usually farrow more and larger pigs than young ones.

FIGHT OVER LAND

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD AND HOMESTEADERS DISPUTE TITLE.

UP TO SUPREME COURT

Case Involves Minnesota Land Once Granted to Railroad and Revoked — Again Given Another Construction.

Washington, April 27.—A bitter controversy over the attitude of the interior department toward land grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. reached a climax today when the matter was laid before the supreme court of the United States for a decision. Individual land claimants in Minnesota contend that the department has shown unjustified favors to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. as successor to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.

Frank B. Kellogg recently before the public as leading governmental "trust buster" appeared for Frederick Weyerhauser and John A. Humbird in defense of the department.

The Northern Pacific Railway Co claims title to one parcel of land, and Frederick Weyerhauser and John A. Humbird to two others by reason of privileges given to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to select land within the 40-mile limit of its road through Minnesota. In opposition, Fred Wass claims one parcel under the homestead law and H. H. Hoyt and Charles D. Campbell to the others, under the timber and stone act.

Controversy grows out of the question as to whether the railroad terminated at Duluth, Minn., or at Ashland, Wis. The railroad has filed on a tract east of Duluth before the question of terminus came up when the department ruled that the terminus was at Duluth. The government cancelled the selection of the railroad to these parties. Individual claimants then filed upon them. The Hoyt and Wass applicants were accepted but the Campbell application was rejected. Finally when the supreme court decided that the terminus was at Ashland, the department approved of the selections of the railroad. Suits were then brought in the federal courts by Hoyt and Campbell. A decision was given in favor of Hoyt but against Campbell. In the state court a decision was given in favor of Wass on the strength of the Hoyt case. All these cases have been brought to the supreme court for a review.

Saving His Life.

A story is told of an Englishman who had occasion for a doctor while staying in Peking.

"Sing Loo, gleatest doctor," said his servant; "be savee my lifee once."

"Really?" queried the Englishman.

"Yes; me tellible awful," was the reply; "me callee in another doctor. He givee me medicine; me velly, velly bad. Me callee in another doctor. He come and give me medicine, make me velly, velly badder. Me callee in Sing Loo. He no come. He savee my life."

Getting Even.

William, aged five, had been reprimanded by his father for interrupting while his father was telling his mother about the new telephone for their house. He sulked awhile, then went over to his mother and, patting her cheek, said:

"Mother dear, I love you."

"Don't you love me too?" asked his father.

Without glancing at him, William said disdainfully: "The wire's busy."

Single Blessedness.

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

The state supreme court has sustained a decision of the lower court allowing a Polk county farmer a verdict of $500 against the Great Northern railroad for damages to land caused by water being turned from its natural course by reason of the railroad grades. The decision is considered most important and may be a precedent for bringing many suits against railroad companies for damages from water through lack of culverts and diverting water from its regular channels.

POLITICS IN THE SAINTLY CITY

She Shocks the Board's Dignity.

In another matter she wanted to know. It appears that recently some grade text books were approved by the school board. With practical unanimity the teachers in those classes the text books were used wanted a different kind, and the lady member of the board wanted to know why their recommendation didn't have weight. Evidently the board don't approve of such inquisitiveness on the part of new members, and the president was very dignified when he assured the inquiring member that the board would not tolerate insinuations and that gentlemen members, if they dared make such insinuations, would have their blocks knocked off. The lady member at last accounts was however undismayed and unsuppressed. Generally there are a good many things about the affairs of school boards which in this town are a big item, that a good many other people want to know,—and they are inclined to felicitate themselves on the fact that at least there is someone on the St. Paul school board who isn't afraid to ask questions.

Clamping Down the Lid.

At least one thing was indicated during the recent election campaign, and that that even in a big city like this, when the police decide to put on the lid they can clamp it down almighty tight. There were nights when the thirsty couldn't get a drink after eleven o'clock for love or money and whole Sundays when the town is as dry as a bone. Public sentiment or no public sentiment, when the St. Paul police start in earnest to do anything no one who knows about them will question their efficiency.

The Mayor's Model.

That appears to be the conclusion St. Paul's Republican mayor-elect has come to. He makes no secret of his intention not to interfere with the city's police department. The result is more than likely to show that he will conclude that he will have done his full duty if he gives the city as efficient administration as the Democrats have furnished for the past ten years or so.

AN ADVERTISING SCHEME

By ARCHIBALD SPOFFARD.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"The fact is, Paul," said the head of the firm of Greenaway & Co., "there's not much chance for you here. Our goods are sold exclusively on advertisement. All we have to do is to deliver them on whatever demand there is for them. I can get men to ship goods and keep accounts for comparatively small compensation. However, I'll admit you've served me well. I'll pay the expenses of your trip."

"Thank you for the funds, uncle. I'll take the trip."

Paul Greenaway was at a crisis in his affairs. It was necessary for him to be something better than a mere shipping clerk in his uncle's office. The occasion of this necessity was that he had fallen in love with Mollie Edwards. He couldn't support her on what he was getting with Greenaway & Co. They would pay him no more, and he must either give up Mollie or invent some plan to make more money. What he desired was to think out a plan for increasing the sales of Greenaway's soap. By effecting that purpose he might go back with his uncle on his return to a very different position from the one he was leaving.

Mollie kissed him goodby, bidding him be of good cheer, and he went aboard the steamer Arago that was to take him to England.

The second or third night out, while quietly sleeping in his berth, Paul was awakened by a shock. He listened. The machinery stopped. He heard the sounds of men running on the decks above and a confusion of orders. Putting on some clothing, he ran out into the saloon and thence up the companionway. Outside there was a dense fog. Then he knew there had been a collision.

One party under direction of the first mate was lowering the boats; another under the captain was endeavoring to pass a sail down over the port bow to cover a hole that had been rammed there by another vessel.

When morning dawned an east wind sprang up, the fog cleared, but the ship that had done the ramming was nowhere to be seen. But something more terrifying was plainly visible—the Newfoundland coast, on to which the Arago was drifting.

Two dangers threatened the ship—the one that she would go ashore, the other that she would sink. If her bow could be raised so as to lift the hole, into which, despite the covering sail, the water was pouring, above the surface she could steam away from the coast. In order to accomplish this result the captain ordered the freight stored forward thrown overboard.

Men who are born to do great things must be endowed with the faculty of ignoring danger and being able to think quickly at critical moments. Paul Greenaway turned out to be such a man. When he saw boxes going over, many of which floated, he ran down the companionway to the engine room. There he espied a pot of red paint. Slipping a coin in the engineer's hand, he seized the paint pot—there was a brush in it—ran back on deck and began to paint on the boxes that were being thrown over: "Use Greenaway's Soap."

The first impulse of the captain on seeing the young man at this work was to hurl an imprecation at him; but, seeing that the coolness displayed restored confidence to the passengers, he changed his mind. Paul continued to paint his advertisements on every box or bale that was likely to float, and the ocean was strewn with messages in bright red paint, all driven by the wind toward the shore.

By the time the vessel's bow was sufficiently lightened to raise the hole above the surface she had drifted to within a couple of miles of land. Paul went to the captain and offered him all the money he had with him if he would put him ashore. The captain declined the offer. Then Paul begged him to give him a boat and let him go ashore himself. The captain, appreciative of the effect of Paul's coolness in calming the passengers, consented. A boat was lowered, with provisions in her in case the wind should suddenly change and she should be driven out to sea. Paul was lowered in the boat and pulled for the shore. The waves were not dangerously high, and in time the wind would have carried him to land even without pulling. On the way he picked up a life buoy on which was painted the name "Emma Bradley." This fixed the name of the vessel that had collided with the Arago. As he proceeded he saw wreckage to convince him that the Emma Bradley had gone down.

He reached a beach on which the breakers were rolling, and, not being skilled at beaching, his boat was upset, and he was thrown up on to the sand by the waves. He found the shore covered with boxes and bales that he had painted, and as the region was thickly populated many people had collected to appropriate their contents. Near by was a telegraph office, from which he sent a message directed to Greenaway & Co., makers of Greenaway's soap, giving an account of the collision. His message, the first and only one about the accident sent for weeks, was published as it was received, and Greenaway soap was mentioned from one end of the country to the other.

That stroke of genius made Paul Greenaway a member of the firm of Greenaway & Co. He married his sweetheart and became a millionaire.

To the Creditor.

Here's to the creditor! Long may he reign!
May his faith never waver, his trust never wane.
May the Lord make him gentle and gracious and gay,
Yet quick to resent the least offer of pay.
May he soften his heart, as he softened, we're told,
To the Israelites' "touch" the Egyptian of old.
And when on his last long account he shall look
The angel will say as he closes the book,
"The Lord gives you credit for credit you gave."
So here's to the creditor! Long may he waive!

The Taking of the Castle

A Historical Tale of Lake Como

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

On Lake Como, in northern Italy towering some 500 feet above the water, is a rock on the summit of which is the ruin of the Castle of Musso. In the early part of the sixteenth century a young man named Gian Giacomo Medici, afterward called "the Medici," became ambitious to possess this fortress. At sixteen he had committed a murder, and when later he was offered the stronghold on Lake Como as a price for assassinating Astorre Visconti he readily consented.

Meanwhile the duke, having become himself afraid of the Medici, laid a plan for putting him, too, out of his way. He gave him the official documents conferring upon him the rock on Lake Como and sent him to take possession. He was also made the bearer of a sealed letter to the commandant. Becoming suspicious of the contents of the letter, he opened it and found that it contained an order to arrest the bearer and put him to death secretly. Giacomo destroyed the letter and as soon as he had taken possession of the fortress paid the men who were there to go away and replaced them by his own adherents.

The new possessor of Musso made it impregnable, mounting cannon on its battlements that commanded the lake. He established a "custom house" and kept his revenue officers busy intercepting vessels and levying dues upon their cargoes. In this way he prospered, and his power enabled him to appropriate much of the neighboring territory.

The Emperor Charles V. of Spain then had a foothold in northern Italy, and his representative in that region, Villaterelo, thought that he should possess himself of Musso for his imperial master, thus ending the Medici's piracies. Villaterelo had in prison a man named Sardo, whom he determined to utilize in this work. He told Sardo that if he would go to the Medici as a spy and concoct a plan by which the fortress of Musso might be delivered into the Spanish hands he should receive a free pardon from the emperor. Sardo accepted the mission and departed for its accomplishment. In due time he returned with the information that on a certain day the Medici would leave Musso for Bormio in order to take the famous baths there. A few soldiers only would remain in the fortress, and these, Sardo said, he had bribed to open the gates to the Spaniards.

Villaterelo and his spy then completed a plan supplementary to what had already been accomplished. Boats filled with armed men were to be rowed under cover of the darkness to the foot of the rock on which Musso stood. The force was to climb to the fortress, and when it was in their possession a cannon was to be fired as a signal to that effect. A sailing vessel following the expedition was then to return to Villaterelo with the news.

On the appointed night, it having been ascertained that the Medici had really left Musso, the little fleet started from the town of Lecco, on an arm of Lake Como, called Lake Lecco, under command of Villaterelo's brother. On reaching Musso they debarked and began the ascent. Approaching the summit, they gave a preconcerted signal and, moving over a narrow pass, were one by one admitted within the gates.

On the bosom of the lake below the commander of the dispatch ship listened for the sound of the signal gun that was to announce the capture. Suddenly a boom from above broke upon the still night air. On the wings of the wind the little ship sailed southward to Lecco, where Villaterelo was feverishly awaiting the result of the expedition. As soon as the welcome news was communicated to him he set sail himself to take possession of his newly acquired fortress.

Let us take up the thread of the story with the Medici's part in it. On the day he was to have gone to Bormio he ostentatiously left his stronghold with a large proportion of his men and a quantity of baggage as if for a long journey. But he had not gone far before he returned by an unfrequented path and re-entered his castle, doubtless through a subterranean passage hewn in the rock under the mountain, a portion of which is still discernible. When the first of Villaterelo's soldiers emerged from the narrow passage which led to the gateway and stood within the battlements he was silently dispatched. The next man then entered and met the same fate. Thus the whole of the invading force was killed, no man knowing what had happened to the one who had gone before him. When the last man had been killed the Medici himself fired the signal gun.

Meanwhile the possessor of Musso had caused the lake to be guarded by boats, with chains swung between them under water, with the intention of cutting off Villaterelo's fleet. But the Spaniard had not reached this point when he received the information that instead of being in possession of Musso his little army had been annihilated.

After a number of years of such life the Medici accepted a large sum of money and the title of Marquis of Mangnano to abandon Musso and cede his conquests to the Duke of Milan. He was greatly moved at leaving the stronghold on which he had spent so much care and is said to have shed tears—not of repentance, however.

SHERWOOD GOT TWO DITCH JOBS

Will Construct Ditches No. 42 and 43.—About Thirteen Miles of Ditches.

One Will Drain Land in Mayfield and Kratka; Other in Hickory and Star.

Last Saturday Auditor A. A. Latendresse let the contract for the construction of County Ditches No. 42 and 43. Jerry Sherwood of Litchfield got both contracts, the contract price in each case being 11½ cents per cubic yard of earth removed.

Ditch No. 42, petitioned for by Cornelius Peterson and others, will be about six miles long and it will drain land in the towns of Mayfield and Kratka. The cost of construction will be about $9200.

Ditch No. 43, petitioned for by A. D. Brown and others, will be about seven miles long. It will drain land in Hickory and Star and will cost about $8650.

A Real Live Count.

Preferring life on a Minnesota farm to that of mingling with the nobility in Belgium, Count Leopold de Rabiano and his wife have come to the Gopher State and taken residence near Radium, between Thief River Falls and Warren on the Soo line. There they will engage in the dairy business and show the rest of the nobility in Belgium how to do real work. The Count and his wife were among a party of 35 Belgians that reached St. Paul a few days ago. They are quiet, unassuming, and but for the fact that they are better dressed, could not have been told from other immigrants. The countess wore a neat light traveling dress. Her husband might have been taken for a prosperous farmer. With him was Henry Moerdeck, a millionaire, who has bought property near that of the count. "The heads of all these families are men of means," said the Rev. H. N. Van Der Velden, who was sent to Belgium by the Minnesota Catholic Colonization Company to organize the party. "Some of them individually have enough money to buy a 10,000 acre tract of land."

May Sell Beer and Malt.

The local saloon keepers will be allowed to sell malt liquors, wine and beer as long as no spirituous liquors are handled and no booze of any kind sold to Indians. The following telegram was received here Monday forenoon from special agent Johnson:

Mr. H. J. Enderle: Your letter April 21. All traffic in spirituous liquors in Plummer must cease on May tenth and all spirituous liquors must be removed outside the prohibited district. Sales of wine and beer will not be interfered with except to Indians.—Plummer Pioneer.

Herbert Finkleisen, Theo. Labissoniere and C. W. Johnson went for a trip Sunday afternoon with the Finkleisen car through the towns of Black River, Polk Centre and Perry.

BIG FIELD MEET AT CROOKSTON

High School Students of Red River Valley in Athletic Contests

Red Lake Falls Boys Will Participate in Some Events.

At the meeting of the Red River Valley Athletic association held at Crookston recently, it was decided to hold a field meet at Crookston, Saturday May 28. There are fifteen schools in the valley and quite a number of them will be represented at the field meet. Some of Supt. Koos's husky fellows have decided to train for some of the events. Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls, Fosston, McIntosh, Warren, East Grand Forks, Fertile, Argyle, and other places will be represented and it will be quite a notable athletic event.

Census Completed.

The work of taking the census has been completed and the reports have been sent in. If you were not counted you can't get into the records now. What is the population of Red Lake Falls? When is a comet? Uncle Sam told Enumerator Buse to "keep his mouth shut" and Buse isn't saying a word—not a word.

Sentenced to Reformatory.

Carl Swansen was arrested at Thief River Falls charged with passing forged checks. He had a hearing in municipal court Tuesday and was bound over to the grand jury. However, later he decided to plead guilty. He was taken before Judge Wm. Watts at Crookston yesterday and plead guilty to forgery in the third degree. He was given a reformatory sentence.

Miss Eva Bray Dead.

Miss Eva Bray, who has been ill with tuberculosis for the past several months, passed away yesterday. Funeral services will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at St. Joseph's church of which deceased was a member. An obituary will be published in the next issue.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT SOLD

Red Lake Falls Electric Light Company Has Sold the Dam and Plant to the Red River Power Company.

New Company Will Give City All Day Service and Will Greatly Increase the Capacity of the Plant.

Last Friday the water power and electric light plant owned by the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company was sold. There have been persistent rumors that this sale had been made before, but, though negotiations have been on for some time the sale was not made until Friday and this is the first authoritative statement of the exact nature of the transaction.

The property has been purchased by the Red River Power company of Grand Forks and Crookston of which W. J. Murphy, publisher of the Minneapolis Tribune, is president.

The new owners of the Red Lake Falls plant will make some big improvements, greatly increasing the capacity of the plant. The Gazette called up Ed. Peterson, superintendent of the plant at Crookston, last evening, and secured an authentic statement from him. Mr. Peterson says that the dam is to be raised five feet, giving a twenty foot head. The canal conducting the water to the wheel is to be enlarged to three times the present width and a new modern concrete power house is to be constructed. He says that 1500 kilowatts electric energy will be developed, that the company will have at its disposal 2500 horse power.

Red Lake Falls is to have all day service so that any amount of power, enough to operate a big mill or just enough to heat a lady's curling iron, may be purchased for use at any time during the twenty-four hours of the day.

An electrical transmission line from this city to Grand Forks is to be constructed so that the surplus power may be transmitted to the North Dakota city.

Mr. Peterson says that all of these improvements are to be made this summer and that work will be commenced late in June or early in July. He says that $200,000 will be expended in making the improvements.

Whether or not the sale of the light plant means a brighter future for Red Lake Falls the Gazette cannot say. It is true, of course, that the service is to be improved and everybody will be glad that there is to be all day service, but whether or not it means bigger things in the future one fellow has as much license as another to guess.

When seen in regard to the above then, Marcus Johnson, president of the Red Lake Falls Milling Co., owners of the water power, and also of the Electric Light Co., had this to say:

"Yes, we finally accepted an offer, and have sold to the Red River Power company the water power, and the plant and property of the Red Lake Falls Electric Light Co. It has been my hope, and object of my constant efforts for some time back, to secure the co-operation of other parties who have large capital at their command, in order to bring about the location of certain industries in Red Lake Falls, such as a pulp mill, and other enterprises for which power would be utilized here. I have worked on such propositions incessantly for over a year with varying prospects of success; have made all kinds of offers to prospective investors, whom I was assured were responsible and had good backing; offering to take interest with them in order to show my faith in the undertaking.

"As is a well known fact there is nothing so timid and shy as capital, when sought for investment in new prospects, and especially, when on so large a scale as is required in the development and utilization of water powers. The element of uncertainty, present in all large undertakings, naturally causes investors to hesitate. If in addition to this there is in the community any show of hostility, or display of spirit of opposition to such as have, or plan to invest their means in the large enterprises in the place, it is often the means of discouraging altogether such ventures.

"It may be said in this connection that there are some in Red Lake Falls who have not displayed the spirit in this respect that is best calculated to encourage people to invest their money in large manufacturing enterprises and thus build up a town. Such men, especially when they happen, for a time, to be placed in a position of power and authority, if persistent in a selfish and obstructive course can do a great deal to harass and discourage investments and retard development. The experience the Electric Light Co. had with the city authorities of last year, first in the matter of the renewal of its five year franchise, which it was clearly the wish of the large majority of the citizens should be granted, as a matter of course; there being agreements as to rates and term; as well as later in the negotiations looking to an extention of the time for the use of the streets for poles and wire, that would give more assurance and permanence to investment, without at all handicapping city tactics and obstructions that we were continually up against in these matters, were, to say the least, tiresome and discouraging, and to tell the truth, were largely the cause of failure to interest parties who otherwise considered favorably, but having learned, from some source, of these proceedings, simply remarked that they would invest no money where such an attitude was taken. There is abundant evidence, however, that a large majority of the people of Red Lake Falls believe in the square deal and in considering all questions that come up in a liberal and progressive spirit.

"The new owners plan to expend a great deal of money in improvements, and in developing the water power to its fullest capacity, so there will be plenty of water available for all purposes for which it may be required, and of course they will prefer to use it all here. In case of surplus, however, they have the additional advantage of being in a position to utilize it elsewhere.

"We still retain large business interests in and about Red Lake Falls, and I expect to continue as in the past, to labor for its development and to do my best in its behalf in any matters effecting its interest. The sale of our power and lighting plant does not necessarily mean that we may not build a mill. I have reserved the privelege of obtaining power from the new owners of the dam, and this arrangement will cost less than the expense of keeping the dam in repairs. We will continue the operation of the Pinault mill as long as satisfactory arrangements can be made. Red Lake Falls is all right as a location for a mill of such capacity as may be warranted by the supply of wheat that can be secured locally, or on lines of railroad running through here, but the difficulty and increased cost of late, on shipments from other lines on account of the stand of the railroad companies now take to what they term the "back haul" from their main lines, does not make milling in transit an attractive proposition for the future. It makes it necessary, in the future, for mills to depend more and more on the local supply of grain, or that from adjacent territory."

POLITICIANS ENDORSE ADMINISTRATION

And They Will Try to Induce the Delegates to be Good, Too.

Will Senator Clapp Favor the Program or Will He Insurge?

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, May 17—As the time set for the Republican county convention approaches, it is becoming every day more apparent that administration Republicans are staking everything on their ability to control the organization. By administration Republicans is meant the active politicians who pose as leaders, local or otherwise, who are either in office or hope to attain office or patronage of some kind. The state administration is making the cause of the national administration its own. Their political fortunes are bound up together. The practical politicians in the cities are very generally helping to draw the party lines tight.

Putting on the Screws.

One sees evidences everywhere that there is sympathy for the insurgents among the active party workers. In this indeed the bosses are logical. The president is at the head of the party. It is plain that he has given his confidence to the congressional leaders. He has gone out of his way to express his high appreciation of the public services of Senator Aldrich. Not only has he himself defended the Aldrich-Payne tariff law as the best of the country has ever had, but Attorney General Wickersham, speaking for him and for his administration, has made it plain that he regards Cummins, Dolliver, Beveridge, LaFollette and other prominent insurgents as, if not without the party's pale, at least as mutinous persons who should be disciplined. The same tone is naturally taken by those, big and little, who wish to stand well with the administration. Thus the active Republican politicians from the governor down are making it plainer day by day that they are looking to their leaders for instructions rather than to the people for inspiration.

The Convention in Reactionary Hands.

That the Republican convention will reflect the wishes of the party managers rather than the insurgency which is rife among rank and file of Republican voters throughout the state I make no doubt. These latter are pretty sure to find themselves out generaled at the primaries. The local politicians are accustomed to manage things. They know how. They will make it their business to know which of the prominent men throughout the counties and in the several precincts are all right. They will see that the proper sort of men go to the county conventions. Later they will select safe men to go to St. Paul. To a greater extent and more completely than most people think this convention has been organized for that purpose. The wires are being pulled at and behind the figureheads at the state capitol.

The Attitude of Candidates.

A good many of the leading candidates for state office have been in St. Paul during the past week. Their line of talk is interesting and instructive at least as to the plan of the campaign. It found an echo in Governor Eberhart's speech at Omaha. Much will be made of the prosperity of the country. 'The farmer will be told how rich he has become. The bank deposits will be pointed to as evidence of his prosperity. All this has happened under a Republican administration and under a protective tariff, which, although perhaps not in every way an ideal tariff, is at least the best tariff the country has ever had. There is thro agricultural prosperity, a Republican administration and a high protective tariff being contemporaneous, the farmers owe their prosperity to the Republicans and to the high taxes the Republicans make them pay. As a post hoc, propter hoc argument, it is plain that this has no flaw.

All Talk Alike.

The noticeable thing about this, beside the set form in which this statement is made by those in the confidence of state leaders, is that the closer you get to the executive office, and the nearer you are to those who have in charge, the making of the slate, and the more persistently is this view insisted on. The leaders here make no secret of the fact that they feel it incumbent upon them to instruct the people. They do not at all hesitate to say—in fact they rather pride themselves upon it—that their campaign is one of education. The people, they say, have been misled. When they understand the question they will see things in their right light.

A Peregrinating Champion.

No one regards himself as having received quite so loud a call to preach the righteousness of Cannon and Aldrich and the infallibility of present Republican leadership as Adam Bede who occasionally drifts into town. In fact he has appointed himself champion in chief of maligned patriots. When the talk was most bitter against Mr. Cannon, Mr. Bede had much to say of the homespun virtues of "Uncle Joe." When everybody was criticising Ballinger Adam recalled his past history and the campaign he made for the reform in Seattle. When persons ventured to criticise the president, the birch bark statesman was properly shocked and straight away wrote out for him a certificate of character. This week he has felt the call to an even more difficult task and has undertaken to crown Billy Lorimore with a halo of glory.

The Illinois Way.

He only used to be Billy Lorimore—that was when he was down among the "boys" in the house of representatives. Now he is Senator Lorimore from Illinois, and hereby, as it is beginning to appear, hangs something of a tale. When they came a year or so ago to choose a senator down in Illinois, they thought they would try the now plan of having the people declare their choice at the primaries. So it was put up to them. They chose by a small plurality of the vote cast the retiring member, Senator Hopkins. When the legislature met it refused to ratify the result of the popular election. Then there was the very duce to play. They balloted away for weeks and months and still there was no choice. Finally one fine day W. W. Lorimore of Chicago, who hadn't been a candidate at the primaries at all, and who hadn't been regarded as a possibility, was elected by a combination of Republicans and Democrats.

Stalwart Methods.

He took his seat and outside of Illinois that was the last heard of the matter for months. But influence of one kind or another seemed to have been at work. Some one was doing some burrowing down deep. Then one day a member of the Illinois legislature confessed that he had been paid $1000 for voting for Mr. Lorimore and had received as his share of the "jackpot," or general corruption fund an additional $900. Later another statesman admitted that he had been similarly influenced, and gave quite a circumstantial account of who paid the money and where it was received. The Cook county grand jury took the matter up and is at present engaged in quite an exhaustive inquiry into the matter. While these and similar arguments were being presented to members of the legislature to convince them that it was their duty to vote for Mr. Lorimore, Mr. Lorimore was on the ground

SENIOR CLASS PLAY MADE A BIG HIT

First High School Commencement Event Was a Big Success.

A Funny College Play That Made Everybody Laugh.

The presentation of the senior class play, "Hicks at College," the first high school commencement event, was a pronounced success.

It is a rollicking college play with not much of a plot except possibly a low down scheme to tickle the funny bone of the fellow who watches the play. The Bijou theatre was filled Friday and Saturday evenings with people who enjoyed the good fun.

The play was so well handled that it would be difficult to give special mention to any without doing injustice to others, though it is true that some of the work was so very good that it deserves special mention.

Numbers were sung by the high school chorus in a delightful manner and Freund's orchestra furnished good music.

THE LATE KING EDWARD VII.

CAREER OF EDWARD VII., KING OF GREAT BRITAIN

England's dead king, Edward VII., whose full title was "king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of all the British dominions beyond the seas, emperor of India," was the eldest son and the second child of Queen Victoria and Albert, the prince consort. He was born November 9, 1841, in Buckingham palace and was christened Albert Edward.

At his birth he was created prince of Wales and by virtue of that dignity he became also knight of the garter. As heir apparent to the British throne he succeeded to the title of duke of Cornwall and its emoluments, and as heir to the crown of Scotland he became great steward of Scotland, duke of Rothesay, earl of Carrick, baron of Renfrew and lord of the Isles. On September 10, 1849, he was created earl of Dublin, this title being conferred on him and his heirs in perpetuity. Among the other titles and commands held by Edward were duke of Saxony, colonel of the Tenth hussars, colonel-in-chief of the Rifle brigade, field marshal of the British army and field marshal of the German army.

The prince received a most elaborate, broad and carefully planned education. At first he was under the charge of four private tutors, and subsequently his education was directed by Baron Stockmar and Charles Kingsley. In order to give him a taste of college life, he was sent for one session to the University of Edinburgh, for one year to Oxford and for four terms to Cambridge. During these years he acquired a wide general knowledge of the arts and sciences and became quite proficient in modern languages.

In 1860 the prince made a tour of the United States and Canada and the next year he joined the British army at Curragh camp, Ireland. In 1862 he set out on his travels again, this time visiting Jerusalem and other places of biblical interest. His companion on the trip was Dean Stanley of Westminster.

Edward's public life began in February, 1863, when, as heir to the throne, he took his seat in the house of lords. On March 10 of the same year he married Princess Alexandra Caroline Mary Charlotte Louisa Julia, the eldest daughter of King Christian IX. of Denmark. Her beauty, grace and charming manners at once gave her a popularity in Great Britain that has continued unlessened throughout her life as princess and queen. In 1875-76 the prince made an extended tour through the Indian empire and was received everywhere with lavish and magnificent hospitality, the native rulers seeking to outdo one another in the gorgeousness of the entertainments provided for the emperor.

On the death of Queen Victoria, January 22, 1901, Edward succeeded to the throne. The coronation was set for June 26, 1902, and all preparations for the magnificent event had been completed when disquieting rumors of the king's ill health, which had been current for several days, were confirmed by the postponement of the ceremony. It was announced that the king was suffering from perityphlitis, and on June 24 he underwent an operation. After some weeks of the greatest anxiety, he recovered, and the coronation took place August 9.

During the long years of his princehood Edward's public duties consisted solely in the office of representing the royal family at all manner of public events, and he performed these duties well. But the deadly monotony of such a life was too much for the vigorous man, and he found relaxation in amusements that frequently gave rise to scandals and that gave the world a wrong impression of his real character. He was especially fond of the theater and among his boon companions for years were actresses and actors. Also he developed a great liking for Paris and often visited that gay capital incognito. The Riviera and Biarritz likewise were familiar with the face of the prince of Wales.

But all this, as has been said, was only his relaxation, and after coming to the throne his conduct always was so circumspect that not the most captious critic could find any fault with it.

As a diplomat Edward was unexcelled among the monarchs of Europe. His influence was always thrown to the side of international peace where compatible with national honor, and his advice and example had a steadying effect on all Europe. He looked with amused tolerance on the vagaries and extravagances of his nephew, the emperor of Germany, but occasionally that ruler exasperated him to such an extent that he could not refrain from giving him some stern advice. Such admonition was not received by William in a submissive spirit, and once in a while there were sensational rumors that the peaceful relations between the two countries were about to be ruptured.

The development of the king's character in his later years was especially gratifying to the nation. In addition to the love of his people, which he had always had, he gained their admiration and respect. They had the utmost confidence in his good judgment, as was amply exemplified during the late crisis over the budget, and they were always sure he would do the right thing at the right time.

To Edward and Alexandra were born six children. The first, Prince Albert, duke of Clarence, died in 1892, aged twenty-eight years. The second, George Frederick Ernest Albert, born on June 3, 1865, succeeds to the throne. The other children are: Princess Louisa Victoria, married to the duke of Fife; Princess Victoria Alexandra; Princess Maude Charlotte, married to Prince Charles of Denmark, and Prince Alexander John, who died the day after his birth in 1871.

Absolute Rest.

"Clyde Fitch was an indefatigable worker," said an actor who has played in many of the Fitch comedies. "When he had a play on the stocks he would labor over it day and night, often scarcely pausing for his meals, and getting very little sleep. Consequently his health suffered. He would work until on the verge of a nervous breakdown, and then his physician would step in and force him to knock off.

"During one of these periods of enforced idleness he was lounging in the Players club one day when Harry B. Smith, the prolific comic opera librettist, strolled in.

"'What are you doing now?' asked Smith.

"'I'm in my doctor's hands,' replied Fitch. 'He tells me I'm in a bad way, and has absolutely forbidden me to do any brain work.'

"'That's tough," said Smith. 'How do you manage to put in the time?'

"'Oh, I'm writing the libretto of a musical comedy,' replied Fitch with one of his cynical smiles.'"

They All Serve.

George C. Boldt, the well-known hotel man, was talking in Philadelphia about the hotels of Switzerland.

"They are good," said Mr. Boldt. "At the price they are remarkably good. The Swiss are a nation of hotel keepers.

"The Alps, you know, draw all the world to Switzerland, and the Switzer who wants to become a millionaire goes into the hotel business as an American would go into steel or sugar. He begins at the bottom; he is a waiter.

"It is said that once in Berne, at a historic public meeting, all the leading men of Switzerland were gathered together. A vote had been taken, and in the intense silence preceding the epoch-making verdict of the tellers a wag shouted, 'Waiter!'

"Instantly the whole assembly rose as one man and answered, 'Yes, sir.'"

STIRS UP PROBERS

DEAN SHEPPARD STARTLES THE SENATE HIGH COST COMMITTEE.

N. D. MAN GIVES FIGURES

Democrats Somewhat Surprised When They Learn Machinery is Higher in Canada Than in United States.

Washington, May 12.—Testimony regarding the relation of the farmer to the cost of living was given yesterday before the senate committee investigating the subject by John H. Sheppard, dean of the North Dakota Agricultural college at Fargo. Dean Sheppard spoke of modern farm life, many of which, he said, added to the cost of living on the farms, and to the cost of producing farm products.

He said:

"I have made a rough estimate as to how much this higher standard of living amounts to, and have placed it at 50 cents an acre. It adds that much to the cost of production per acre."

The witness startled the democrats when he testified that agricultural implements were 25 per cent higher in Canada than in the United States. During the early part of the inquiry the democratic members of the committee referred frequently to the "harvester" trust and the tariff, and asked many questions about the increase in the cost of farming implements and machinery.

"You should compare the prices in the United States and across the border in Canada," suggested Senator Clark of Arkansas.

"Agricultural implements are 25 per cent higher in Canada than in North Dakota," said Dean Sheppard.

"Higher," exclaimed a democratic senator.

The reply was in the affirmative.

Dean Sheppard told the committee that dollar wheat today is worth no more to the farmer than 80 cent wheat 10 years ago. There has been an increase of 150 per cent in the price of land while its producing capacity has been reduced 20 per cent in the same period. There has been an increase of 19 per cent in the cost of farming implements and an increase of 60 per cent in wages.

The witness also asserted that with the increase of wages paid to farm help has come a decrease in efficiency. There has been a scarcity of farm labor, and the hired help are more independent than formerly.

KING EDWARD IS DEAD.

Entire World Mourns Death of Popular English Monarch.

London, May 7.—King Edward VII., who returned to England from a vacation ten days ago in the best of health, died at 11:45 o'clock last night, (5:45 p. m. Chicago time) in the presence of his family, after an illness of less than a week, which was serious hardly more than three days.

The Prince of Wales succeeded to the crown immediately according to the laws of the Kingdom, without official ceremony. His first official act was a dispatch to the Lord Mayor of the announcement of his father's death in pursuance of custom.

His telegram read:

"I am deeply grieved to inform you that my beloved father, the King, passed away peacefully at 11:45 tonight.

(Signed) "George."

The Official Bulletin.

The physicians soon afterwards issued their official bulletin which was as follows:

May 6, 11:50 p. m. His Majesty, The King, breathed his last at 11:45 p. m. in the presence of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Royal, the Duchess of Fife, Princess Victoria and Princess Louise, The Duchess of Argyle.

(Signed.)

"Laking," "Reid," "Powell," "Dawson."

One of Last Utterances.

One of the last utterances attributed to King Edward was:

"Well, it is all over; but I think I have done my duty."

He seemed then to have reached a full realization that his death was approaching.

Wouldn't Answer Census Man.

Chicago, May 12.—After an enumerator, a census inspector, a special agent and a policeman had failed to make her answer questions relative to the taking of the census, Mrs. Katherine Holtrop was arrested by deputy federal marshals here and held to the federal grand jury.

Fast Train Jumps Track.

Cleveland, O., May 12.—Pennsylvania passenger train No. 307 leaving Pittsburg at 5:30 and due in Cleveland at 11 o'clock, jumped the track at Pensington, fifteen miles from Alliance, Ohio, and some of the coaches rolled down a thirty foot embankment. Minot Has $20,000 Fire.

Minot, N. D., May 12.—The north end of lower Main street, Minot, was destroyed by fire early this morning, which was only prevented from spreading to the business portion of the city by the splendid pressure furnished by the new water system.

The fire started in a cigar factory, spread to the European restaurant, McDougal's dray office, O'Lander's employment agency and Smith's pool hall. The total loss on the buildings, which were owned by E. F. Tompkins, is estimated at $20,000, insured for a third of its value. The loss on stock amounts to $6,000, partially insured.

Admits Charge Was Right.

Washington, May 12.—In a letter to Chairman Parker of the house judiciary committee read by Secretary Ballinger to the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation committee today, Attorney General Wickersham admits that his summary to the president of the Glavis charges was ante dated, as charged by Attorney Brandeis.

Attorney General Wickersham will probably be called as a witness in the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation to testify in regard to a conversation he had with Henry M. Hayt, regarding Assistant Secretary Pierce's construction of the code of the laws of May 26, 1808.

EFFORTS ARE SUCCESSFUL

HANNA WORKS TO AID SETTLERS IN GETTING TITLES.

North Dakota Congressman Gets Assurance that There Will be Less Delay.

Washington, May 11.—Numerous complaints have been made to Congressman Hanna from the western portion of North Dakota to the effect that settlers have suffered much delay in getting titles to their lands, owing to the fact that their homestead applications were held up.

The reason for his was that the funds necessary to meet the expense of the examination of the claims for the purpose of discovering whether there was coal under the surface had been practically exhausted;

The reason for this was that the funds gressman Hanna consulted with Chairman Tawney of the appropriations committee in the sundry civil bill and asked that the fund for the ensuing year should be made immediately available as soon as the bill passed so that the work could be taken up and further delay obviated.

The bill as reported out last Saturday contained a provision worded in the manner suggested by Congressman Hanna who thereupon called upon Land Commissioner Bennett and was assured by the latter that as soon as the bill passed he would see to it that the force of experts of North Dakota would be increased so that the work of examination could be taken up and crowded along and the unnecessary delay done away with.

County Auditors in Session.

Grand Forks, N. D., May 11.—The annual convention of the North Dakota County Auditors association convened here yesterday and is still in session today. Final adjournment will be taken at the afternoon session today. At the meeting yesterday afternoon the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—I. W. Healy, Burleigh county.

Vice President—R. P. Irving, Sargent county.

Secretary—W. W. Felson, Pembina county.

The principal question discussed yesterday were as to what an election notice should contain and as to whether or not a county auditor should accept the fees for filing candidates' petitions for the primary elections as provided under the laws of 1907. This law provides that a fee equal to 1 per cent of the annual salary of the office sought, shall be paid by the candidate to the county auditor and that such candidate's petition should be signed by at least 5 per cent of the legal voters casting a ballot for the office seeker or his predecessor at the last election. The law of 1905, providing for such fees, was declared unconstitutional some time during the year 1907, and during the session of the legislature of that year another law was passed.

English Mine Horror.

Manchester, May 12.—An explosion in the Wellington coal mine at White Haven during last night cut off the exit for 136 miners who were working below the surface.

Rescue parties succeeded early today in saving four men who had been working at the bottom of the shaft, but were prevented by gas from penetrating to the point where the main body of men is imprisoned.

At 12:30 this afternoon no further rescues had been accomplished. Every indication was that the inner workings of the mine were afire and there was gravest apprehension regarding the entombed men. The colliery is owned by the Earl of Lonsdale and its workings extend four or five miles beneath the sea.

The spot where the eighty-five hewers and some fifty odd shifters still imprisoned, were working at the time of the explosion is about three miles from the exit. The rescuers directed their efforts to tunneling a road through the accumulation blocking the passage way and by mid-afternoon had reached a point within a mile of their goal. Their progress was slow and dangerous as fumes filled the workings.

Florida is Launched.

New York, May 12.—The biggest ship in the American navy slid off the ways today at the New York navy yard, when the battleship Florida dropped into the water. Later on when the Arkansas and the Wyoming, now under construction are afloat they will exceed the Florida in size by 3,000 tons, a difference sufficient to make a pretty good little liner in itself. The Florida herself is by no means finished, for as she went off the ways today she was only about 60 per cent advanced towards completion, which means that she was not much more than a vast empty hull and still awaits all of the 1,000 boilers and main and secondary engines and armor and equipment that go to make up the ship ready for commission.

Roosevelt to be Special Ambassador.

Washington, May 11. — Theodore Roosevelt today accepted by cable the appointment by President Taft to be special ambassador to represent the United States at the funeral of King Edward, in London, May 20. The cablegrams exchanged by the president and Colonel Roosevelt were not made public.

Accident in British Fleet.

London, May 11.—Reports are current at Dover of serious explosion on flagship London of the British Atlantic battleship fleet in Norwegian waters. The reports cannot be confirmed here. Rear Admiral Sir Colin Richard Keppel is in command of the fleet.

Sawmill Burns.

Winnipeg, May 12.—A big sawmill at Grand View, Manitoba, with its large quantities of stock, was destroyed by fire this morning. The loss is $100,000.

Engineers in Session.

Detroit, Mich., May 11.—More than 3,000 delegates were registered this morning and hundreds more arrived during the day for the opening tonight of the biennial convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which will remain in session until June 4.

Argued Mountrail Case.

Rugby, N. D., May 9.—Arguments were made here yesterday in the case involving the settlement between Ward and Mountrail counties over the recent division.

YEGG'S LIFE STORY

"Liverpool Jack," Safeblower, Relates Experiences.

Once Tried to Blow Police Headquarters Safe to Get Revenge—Proves Self Guilty to Save Friend.

New York.—How he had once tried to blow open the safe at Mulberry street police headquarters in the '80s, as revenge for an unjust conviction got by one of Inspector Byrnes' men; how he had cleverly fooled a country justice of the peace after being caught on a safe-breaking job, by feigning to be drunk; and how he had later proved his own guilt, to save another man from the crime, was told recently at the new Center street headquarters by James Murphy, safe-breaker, arrested for carrying burglar's tools.

It was Murphy, known as "Liverpool Jack," who, with Red Leary and Johnny and Jimmy Hope, blew open the safe of the Manhattan bank, at Broadway and Bleecker street, in the early '70s. Murphy, now well past 70 years, has been implicated in many of the big safe-blowings of two generations. Released from the penitentiary on Blackwell's island only the other morning he was seized again on a bench warrant issued by Judge Rosolsky, charging him with carrying burglars' tools, at the time of his former arrest for carrying a revolver.

The old safe-blower told Inspector McCafferty of the robbery of the Manhatten bank, and said after his release from Sing Sing he went to Kansas City for five years.

"While I was away from the city," he went on, "a safe was blown. When I got back to New York in 1880 one of Byrnes' men nabbed me and railroaded me to prison, for this crime, of which I knew nothing. That was the one great act of injustice done me in all my career, and even the grave won't bring forgetfulness of that nasty piece of work.

Taken Before a Justice of the Peace.

"After I did that five years in Sing Sing for another man's crime I wanted to get square with Byrnes! I and another set out to blow open the safe in police headquarters. It was then in a little office off the big hall. We were at work on it when we heard footsteps, and if we hadn't been frightened off then we would have blown that cheesebox to bits."

In 1885 he went to Gloversville and robbed a safe there. He was arrested outside of the bank, while feigning intoxication, and actually had the loot on him. The policemen did not search him, but took him before a justice of the peace.

"'He was drunk outside the bank just robbed, your honor,' said the policeman," continued Murphy.

"'What's your business?' asked the justice.

"'I'm—hic—a bricklay—hic—er; hod carrier—hic—anything.'

"'How much money have you?'

"'Three—hic—dollars, judge.'

"'Well, you're fined $3, so you can't get drunk for a few days more.'

"But, inspector," continued Murphy, "the laugh was on me. Peggy Donovan was arrested for this crime I had committed, and railroaded to prison. When I learned of it I gave myself up and confessed to the crime. I had a hard time proving I had done the job. I had to subpoena the justice of the peace and the policeman from Gloversville. They bore out my story as far as they could. I was convicted, Peggy was freed and the three years and three months I did for that crime were some of the happiest years of my life."

How he got the name of "Liverpool Jack" was developed as follows:

"You remember, inspector, what you said to me a year ago, when I was nabbed with the gun and tools? You said: 'Murphy, you are old. Do you want to spend the remainder of your life in Sing Sing or in the convicts' home kept by the salvation army out on Long Island?' I told you I wasn't a hypocrite, and it was either freedom to go and do as I please or Sing Sing. I'm James Murphy, alias Conuors, alias Liverpool Jack, and a few other fanciful names; professional criminal—safe-blower.'

The two farmers were looking on while the aviator was cussing and working at his disabled aeroplane, which had come to earth far from the maddening crowd.

"I s'pose a machine like that there comes purty high?" remarked Ezra to Reuben.

"Haw! Haw!" guffawed Reuben loudly, for the benefit of the aviator, "looks to me like it comes purty low, b'gosh!"

"You're dead right, it does, you yap!" roared the angry aviator, "when it lands in your company!"—Literary Magazine of the Pittsburg Dispatch.

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a cliff overlooking the mine, but the traveler shot him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, dug his way out of the tunnel, and departed deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), a famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg, and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. CHAPTER XV.—Continued.

But now, at the very moment of meeting Margaret, he knew that if he found her very angry with him, he would simply listen to what she had to say, make a humble apology, state the truth coldly, and return to his own yacht with Baraka, under her very eyes, and in full sight of Lady Maud and Mrs. Rushmore. Besides, he felt tolerably sure that when Spiro failed to carry out the young Tartar girl's murderous instructions, she would forget all about the oath she had sworn by the "inviolable water of the Styx" and try to kill him with her own hands, so that it would be necessary to take her away abruptly, and even forcibly.

Before the Erinna had quite lost her way, Logotheti had his naphtha launch going alongside, and he got into it with Baraka and Spiro, and the Lancashire Lass had barely time to lower her ladder, while still moving slowly, before the visitors were there.

Baraka bade Logotheti go up first, and trod daintily on the grated steps as he followed him. The chief mate and chief steward were waiting at the gangway. The mate saluted; the steward led the visitors to the main saloon, ushered them in and shut the door. Spiro was left outside, of course.

Mr. Van Torp shook hands coldly with Logotheti; Baraka walked directly to Kralinsky, and then stood stone-still before him, gazing up steadily into his eyes.

Neither Margaret nor Mrs. Rushmore was to be seen. Van Torp and Logotheti both watched the other two, looking from one face to the other. Kralinsky, with his eye-glass in his eye, surveyed the lovely young barbarian unmoved, and the silence lasted half a minute. Then she spoke in her own language and Kralinsky answered her, and only Logotheti understood what they said to each other. Probably it did not occur to Kralinsky that the Greek knew Tartar.

"You are not Ivan. You are fatter, and you have not his eyes."

Logotheti drew a long breath.

"No," answered Kralinsky, "I am Yuryi, his brother. I never saw you, but he told me of you."

"Where is Ivan?"

"Dead."

The proud little head was bowed down for a moment and Baraka did not speak till several seconds had passed. Then she looked up again suddenly. Her dark eyes were quite dry.

"How long?"

"More than four months."

"You know it?"

"I was with him and buried him."

"It is enough."

She turned, her head high, and went to the door, and no one hindered her from going out.

"Mons. Logotheti!" Lady Maud called him, and the Greek crossed the saloon and stood by her. "He is not the man, I see," she said, with a vague doubt in her voice.

"No."

Van Torp was speaking with Kralinsky in low tones. Lady Maud spoke to Logotheti again, after an instant, in which she drew a painful breath and grew paler.

"Miss Donne knows that you are on board," she said, "but she wishes me to say that she will not see you, and that she considers her engagement at an end, after what you have done."

Logotheti did not hesitate.

"Will you kindly give a message to Miss Donne from me?" he asked.

"That quite depends on what it is," Lady Maud answered coldly.

She felt that she herself had got something near a death-wound, but she would not break down.

"I beg you to tell Miss Donne that I yield to her decision," said Logotheti with dignity. "We are not suited to each other, and it is better that we should part. But I cannot accept as the cause of our parting the fact that I have given my protection to a young girl whom I have extracted from great trouble and have treated, and still treat, precisely as I should have treated Miss Donne if she had been my guest. Will you tell her that?"

"I will tell her that."

"Thank you. Good-morning."

He turned and went towards the door, but stopped to speak to Van Torp.

"This gentleman," he said, "is not the man my guest was anxious to find, though he is strikingly like him. I have to thank you for giving her an opportunity of satisfying herself. Good-morning."

Mr. Van Torp was extremely grateful to Logotheti for having ruined himself in Margaret's eyes, and would in any case have seen him to the gangway, but he was also very anxious to know what Kralinsky and Baraka had said to each other in Tartar. He therefore opened the door for the Greek, followed him out and shut it behind him. Baraka and Spiro had disappeared; they were already in the launch, waiting.

"Now what did they say, if it isn't a rude question?" asked the American.

Logotheti repeated the short conversation almost word for word.

"He said that his name was Yuryi," he concluded. "That is George in English."

"Oh, he's George, is he? And what's his dead brother's name, again, please?"

"Ivan. That is John. Before we part, Van Torp, I may as well tell you that my engagement with Miss Donne is at an end. She was good enough to inform me of her decision through Lady Maud. One thing more, please. I wish you to know, as between man and man, that I have treated Baraka as I would my own sister since I got her out of prison, and I beg that you won't encourage any disagreeable talk about her."

"Well, now," said the American slowly, "I'm glad to hear you say that, just in that way. I guess it'll be all right about any remarks on board my ship, now you've spoken."

"Thank you," said Logotheti, moving towards the gangway.

They shook hands with some cordiality, and Logotheti ran down the steps like a sailor, without laying his hand on the man-rope, stepped on board his launch and was off in a moment.

"Good-by! good-by, Miss 'Barrack, and good luck to you!" cried Van Torp, waving his cap.

Logotheti translated his words to Baraka, who looked back with a grateful smile, as if she had not just heard that the man she had risked her life to find in two continents had been dead four months.

"It was his portion," she said gravely, when she was alone with Logotheti on the Erinna, and the chain was coming in fast.

Van Torp went back to the main saloon and found Lady Maud and Kralinsky there. She was apparently about to leave the count, for she was coming towards the door, and her eyes were dark and angry.

"Rufus," she said, "this man is my husband, and insists that I should take him back. I will not. Will you kindly have me put ashore before you start again? My things are ready now."

"Excuse me," answered Mr. Van Torp, digging his large thumbs into his waistcoat pockets, "there's a mistake. He's not your husband."

"He is, indeed!" cried Lady Maud, in a tone her friend never forgot.

"I am Boris Leven," said Kralinsky in an authoritative tone, and coming forward almost defiantly.

"Then why did you tell the Tartar girl that your name was George?" asked Mr. Van Torp, unmoved.

"I did not."

"You've evidently forgotten. That Greek gentleman speaks Tartar better than you. I wonder where you learned it! He's just told me you said your name was George."

"My name is George Boris," answered Kralinsky, less confidently.

He was not a coward, but he had never been face to face with Van Torp when he meant business, and the terrible American cowed him.

She Followed Him.

"My husband's name is only Boris—nothing else," said Lady Maud.

"Well, this isn't your husband; this is George, whoever he is, and if you don't believe it, I'm going to give you an object lesson."

Thereupon Mr. Van Torp pressed the button of a bell in the bulk-head near the door, which he opened, and he stood looking out. A steward came at once.

"Send me Stemp," said Van Torp in a low voice, as he stepped outside.

"Yes, sir."

"And, see here, send six sailors with him."

"Very good, sir."

Mr. Van Torp went in again and shut the door. Kralinsky disdained flight, and was looking out of a window. Lady Maud had sat down again. For the first time in her life she felt weak.

In less than one minute the door opened and Stemp appeared, impassive and respectful. Behind him was the boatswain, a huge Northumbrian, and five young seamen in perfectly new guernseys, with fair quiet faces.

"Stemp."

"Yes, sir."

"Take that man somewhere and shave him. Leave his mustache on." Van Torp pointed to Kralinsky.

For once in his life Stemp gasped for breath. Kralinsky turned a greenish white, and seemed paralyzed with rage.

"Take his beard off, sir, you mean?"

"Yes. Leave his mustache. Here, men," added Van Torp, "take that fellow outside and hold him down in a chair while Stemp shaves him. See?" The boatswain looked doubtful. "He's pretending to be somebody he's not," said Van Torp, "on my ship, and I want to see his face. It's mutiny if you don't obey orders!"

"Aye, aye, sir," responded the boatswain cheerfully, for he rather liked the job since there was a good reason for it.

But instead of going about his business gently, the Northumbrian giant suddenly dashed past Van Torp in a flash, and jumped and hurled himself head foremost at Kralinsky's legs, exactly as if he were diving. In the count's violent fall the revolver he had drawn was thrown from his hand and went off in the air. The boatswain had seen it in time. The big man struggled a little, but the five seamen held him fast and carried him out kicking.

"Stemp."

The valet was preparing to follow the prisoner, and was quite calm again.

"Yes, sir."

"If he won't sit still to be shaved, cut his head off."

"Yes, sir."

Van Torp's eyes were awful to see. He had never been so angry in his life. He turned and saw Lady Maud pressing her handkerchief to her right temple. The ball had grazed it, though it had certainly not been meant for her.

"Rufus!" she cried in great distress, "what have you done?"

"The question is what he's done to you," answered Van Torp. "I believe the blackguard has shot you!"

Wandering Alone in Search of Plants and Minerals.

"It's nothing. Thank God it hit me! It was meant for you."

Van Torp's rage instantly turned into tender care, and he insisted on examining the wound, which was slight but would leave a scar. By a miracle the ball had grazed the angle of the temple without going near the temporal artery, and scarcely singeing the thick brown hair.

Van Torp rang and sent for water and absorbent cotton, and made a very neat dressing, over which Lady Maud tied her big veil. Just as this was done Stemp appeared at the door.

"It's ready, sir, if you would like to come and see. I've not scratched him once, sir."

"All right." Van Torp turned to Lady Maud. "Do you feel faint? Lean on my arm."

But she would not, and she walked bravely, holding herself so straight that she looked much taller than he, though she felt as if she were going to execution.

A moment later she uttered a loud cry and clung to Van Torp's shoulder with both hands. But as for him, he said only two words.

"You hellhound!"

The man was not Boris Leven.

The eyes, the upper part of the face, the hair, even the flowing mustaches were his, but not the small retreating chin crossed by the sharp, thin scar of a sword-cut long healed.

"I know who you are," said Van Torp, surveying him gravely. 'You're Long-legged Levi's brother, that disappeared before he did. I remember that scar."

"Let me off easy," said Long-legged Levi's brother. "I've not done you any harm."

"Beyond wounding Lady Maud, after trying to pass yourself off as her dead husband. No. I won't let you off. Boatswain, I want this man arrested, and we'll take him and all his belongings before the British consul in Messina in less than an hour. You just attend to that, will you? Somebody go and tell the captain."

"Aye, aye, sir."

The rest is soon told. A long inquiry followed, which led to the solution of the mystery and sent Count Yuryi Leven to Siberia; for he was Boris Leven's twin brother.

The truth turned out to be that there had been three brothers, the youngest being Ivan, and they had all entered the same Cossack regiment, and had served in the Caucasus, where most officers learn the Tartar language, which is spoken by all the different tribes. It will be simpler to designate them by the English equivalents for their names.

Boris behaved himself tolerably well in the army, but both his brothers, John and George, who was his twin, were broken for cheating at cards, and emigrated to America. So long as they all wore their beards as officers of Cossack regiments usually do, they were very much alike. They were all educated men of refined tastes, and particularly fond of music.

When his two brothers were cashiered, Boris resigned, entered the diplomatic service, married Lady Maud Foxwell, and was killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg.

John and George separated in America when they were tired of punching cattle.

John was something of a naturalist and was by far the most gifted of the three as well as the most daring. He gravitated to China and at last to Mongolia, wandering alone in search of plants and minerals, and it was to him that Baraka showed the ruby mine. He got back to civilization with his treasure and took it to Petersburg unmolested.

There he found George earning a poor living in an obscure position in the public service, his conduct in the army having been condoned or overlooked. John, who was the incarnation of selfishness, would do nothing for him. George, exasperated by him, and half starved, murdered him in such a way that he was supposed to have died by an accident, took possession of his hoard of unsold rubies, and wrote to his twin brother to come and share the fortune John had left them.

George and Boris had been in constant correspondence, and had even helped each other with money from time to time. Some weeks elapsed after Boris' return to St. Petersburg before his death, and during that time he told George, who knew London well and had, moreover, helped him in his attempt to get a divorce, a vast number of details about his married life and his wife's behavior, her character and tastes. Then Boris was killed in the street, and George left the country and changed his name, with the vague idea that his own was not a very creditable one and that if he kept it he might be troubled by his brother Boris' numerous creditors. He began life over again as Kralinsky.

He had not entertained the least intention of passing himself for Boris and claiming Lady Maud as his wife till he met her, and her beauty made him lose his head completely when he saw that she took him for her husband. He would have been found out inevitably sooner or later, but Van Torp's vigorous action shortened Lady Maud's torments.

George was tried, and Russian justice awoke, possibly under pressure from England. The family history of the Levens was exhumed and dissected before the courts. The creditors of Boris Leven appeared in legions and claimed that in proper course he should have inherited the rubies from his murdered brother, and would then have been able to pay his debts. The court thought so too, and ordered the confiscated treasure to be sold.

But since it had been Boris', the law was obliged to declare that the residue of the money, after paying the debts, was the property of Countess Leven, Boris' widow.

Lady Maud thus found herself in possession of a considerable fortune, for she accepted the inheritance when she was assured that it would go to the Russian crown if she refused it.

The wealth Lady Maud thus commands enables her to carry much further than formerly the peculiar form of charity which she believes to be her own invention, if it may be properly called charity at all, and which consists in making it worth while and agreeable to certain unfortunate people to live decent lives in quiet corners without starving, instead of calling to them to come out from behind the virtue-curtain and be reformed in public. It is a very expensive charity, however, and very hard to exercise, and will never be popular; for the popular charities are those that cost least and are no trouble.

Mme. Konstantinos Logotheti is learning French and English on the Bosphorus with her husband, and will make a sensation when he brings her to London and Paris. On the day of his marriage in Constantinople Logotheti received a letter from Lady Maud telling him how sorry she was that she had not believed him that day on the yacht at Scaletta, and saying that she hoped to meet his wife soon. It was an honest apology from an honest woman.

He received a letter a few days later from Margaret, and on the same day a magnificently printed and recklessly illustrated booklet reached him, forwarded from Paris. The letter was from Margaret to tell him that she also took back what she had thought about Baraka and hoped to see him and her before long. She said she was glad, on the whole, that he had acted like a lunatic, because it was likely that they would both be happier. She herself, she said, was going to be married to Mr. Van Torp at St. George's, Hanover square, before sailing for New York, where she was going to sing at the opera after Christmas. If he should be in town then she hoped he would come and bring his wife.

The booklet was an announcement, interleaved with fine etchings, to the effect that "The Mme. da Cordova and Rufus Van Torp Company" would open their new opera house in Fifth avenue less than two years hence with a grand Wagner festival, to last two months, and to include the performance of "Parsifal" with entirely new scenery, and the greatest living artists, whose names were given.

Mr. Van Torp had told the diva that he would like her to choose a wedding present which she really wanted, adding that he had a few things for her already. He produced some of them, but some were on paper. Among the latter was a house in New York, overlooking the park and copied exactly from her own in London, the English architect having been sent to New York himself to build it. Two small items were two luxurious private cars of entirely different patterns, one for America and one for Europe, which she was always to use when she traveled, professionally or otherwise. He said he did not give her the Lancashire Lass because it wasn't quite new"—having been about ten months in the water—but he had his own reasons, one of which was that the yacht represented a sentiment to him, and was what he would have called a "souviner." But if she could think of anything else she fancied, "now was the time."

She said that there was only one thing she should really like, but that she could not have it, because it was not in the market. He asked what it was, and it turned out to be the ruby which Logotheti had given her, and had taken to Pinney's to be cut, and which had been the cause of so many unexpected events, including her marriage. Logotheti had it in his possession, she supposed, but he had shown good taste in not trying to press it on her as a wedding present, for she could not have accepted it. Nevertheless, she wanted it very much, more as a remembrance than for its beauty.

Mr. Van Torp said he "thought he could fix that," and he did. He went directly to Mr. Pinney and asked what had become of the stone. Mr. Pinney answered that it was now cut and was in his safe for sale. The good man had felt that it would not be tactful to offer it to Mr. Van Torp. Logotheti, who was a fine gentleman in his way, had ordered it to be sold, when a good opportunity offered, and directed that the money should be given to the poor Greeks in London, under the supervision of Lady Maud Leven, the Turkish ambassador and the Greek minister, as a committee. Mr. Pinney, after consultation with the best experts, valued it at 14,000 pounds. Mr. Van Torp wrote a check for the money, put the stone into an inner pocket, and took it to the diva.

"Well," he said, smiling, "here's your ruby, anyway. Anything else today?"

Margaret looked at him wonderingly, and then opened the small morocco case.

"Oh—oh—oh!" she cried, in rising intimations of delight. "I never saw anything so beautiful in my life! It's ever so much more glorious than when I last saw it!"

"It's been cut since then," observed Mr. Van Torp.

"It ought to have a name of its own! I'm sure it's more beautiful than many of the named crown jewels!" She felt half hypnotized as she gazed into the glorious depths of the great stone. "Thank you," she cried, "thank you so very much. I'm gladder to have it than all the other things."

And thereupon she threw her magnificent arms around Rufus Van Torp's solid neck and kissed his cool flat cheek several times; and it seemed quite natural to her to do so; and she wished to forget how she had once kissed one other man, who had kissed her.

"It wants a name, doesn't it?" assented Mr. Van Torp.

"Yes. You must find one for it."

"Well," he said, "after what's happened, I suppose we'd better call it 'The Diva's Ruby.'"

THE END.

Sugar from Old Rags.

Sugar is now manufactured in Germany from old rags. The rags are treated with sulphuric acid and converted into dextrine. This is treated with a milk of lime, and is then subjected to a new bath of sulphuric acid, which converts it into glucose. The glucose obtained by this process is identical with that of commerce, and may be used in the same way for confections, ices, etc.

HOW ROOSEVELT PAID MEN

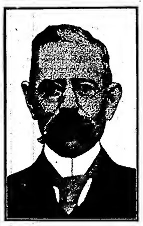
Washington.—Hippopotamus fat, fried and juicy, was the medium of payment used by Colonel Roosevelt to reimburse his black bearers in one part of Africa, according to Major Mearns and J. Alden Loring, the representatives of the Smithsonian institution who went to Africa with former President Roosevelt.

Major Mearns was the surgeon of the expedition and J. Alden Loring the scientist.

"The most interesting sight to me of the whole expedition," said Major Mearns, "was the skinning at night of a hippopotamus, which was killed by the party in the Swahili country. The flickering torchlight, Doctor Heller, the taxidermist, flying around and over and back and forth about the huge carcass, the shiny black skins of the Swahilis—it was the greatest picture I ever saw.



Maj. Mearns.

"But even more interesting was the economical method by which the Swahilis were paid off for her work and for carrying the skin and the skull into camp to be cleaned up. There were 20 of them. Of course, Colonel Roosevelt was always economical in the finances of the expedition. It was necessary. So these natives were not paid in money. Instead Colonel Roosevelt graciously entertained the whole Swahili village with a feast of the roasted fat of the hippopotamus.

"Now, do not laugh. It was a great occasion. Fat of the hippopotamus to the Swahili is as terrapin to the Baltimorean. It was a most distinguished feast, and we left them profoundly grateful and even abashed because they had not done more in exchange for the treat."

Major Mearns, asked about his own experiences, said he felt proud of the record he had made.

"I walked on foot more than 2,000 miles more, I believe, than was covered on foot by any other member of the party. In all the time I was on duty, all but two hours, I had but one little touch of fever. My services as surgeon were called for by every other white man on the expedition for periods more or less long."

GOVERNORSHIP FOR HAVENS

Democrat Who Scored Victory in New York Congressional Race May Get Further Honor.

Rochester, N. Y.—James S. Havens, the Democrat who has been elected to congress in the Thirty-second New York district (Monroe county) by a plurality of about 6,500 over George W. Aldridge, the Republican boss of the county, already has been mentioned as a candidate for governor of the empire state. Mr. Havens is a prominent lawyer and an old-line Democrat. For five years he was the partner of the late James Breck Perkins, whose seat he will fill in the house of representatives, and who was last elected by a plurality of 10,167 votes over his Democratic opponent. Mr. Havens took the stump for Grover Cleveland in both national campaigns, but has had little to do with politics since Mr. Bryan became the Democratic leader. He would support neither Bryan for president nor Hearst for governor. In the recent campaign, however, he was supported by Hearst and the Bryan lieutenants in the district.

How Persimmon Got His Name.

Persimmon, the famous derby winner, whose skeleton has just been presented by King Edward to the Natural History museum, South Kensington, possesses a name which puzzled many learned turfmen. It was adopted by King Edward from "de ole 'simmon tree" of nigger minstrelsy. The name has lately become more familiar from the date plums which are now occasionally seen for sale in the fruiterers' shops. The date plums of the persimmon seem too astringent to suit British palates, but they should be appreciated by people who like medlars when mellowed by frost. By the negroes of the southern states these 'simmons" are highly prized.—Dundee Advertiser.

Meal Always in Readiness

Believer in Corporeal Resurrection Has Table Constantly Spread Adjacent to Tomb.

One of the most curious tombs in the United Kingdom is in County Wexford. In it is laid the body of one of that curious body—the Resurrectionists. One portion of the tomb is a furnished chamber, with a table and a few chairs. On the table will be found at any time a dainty meal of considerable dimensions, with a fowl, a ham, a leg of mutton and the necessary drinkables. The departed Resurrectionist provides by his will that this meal shall be laid each fortnight, and "if the meal is untouched in the mean time, it shall be given to the poor and a fresh meal laid." So far the meal has been untouched, though eerie rumors spread round the district from time to time that in spirit form the gentleman has appeared and has enjoyed his meal. Curious stories are told of poor people to whom the ham or the leg of mutton has been given being awakened in the night by strange rappings on their doors and windows and even by demands, in a grim voice for a portion of the food which had been distributed. As a consequence and probably for another sad reason, it has come to be the practice to consume the food immediately it is brought home. It is the only way to counteract the envy of the spirit, with whom apparently hunger is constantly present.

An Awful Affair.

All who know about art are acquainted with that celebrated statue of ancient times which represents a young boy in the act of removing a thorn from his foot. But the effect which the masterpiece produces is not usually like the one it made on Mrs. Jedediah Weeds of Plum Patch, N. J., when she first visited Europe. Pressed for her opinion on art, as seen over there, she exclaimed:

"As a rule, mind you, the statues wear scarcely any clothes and don't seem to mind in the least. Why, awn to heck! Jedediah and I saw one young bronze boy who had nothing on at all but a thorn in his foot, and he was doin' his level best to take that off!"

Our disappointments oftentimes prove to be streaks of good fortune.

Crime, drunkenness, each in turn, has been tracked back to poverty. Now the doctors trace tuberculosis there. It looks as if an economic clean-up is needed for the health of the race. Riches are not a protection against the ills of economic poverty, for the satin on the back of wealth may have been worked over by a consumptive seamstress. We are so interwoven with each other that the danger of one is quickly communicated and becomes the danger of all.—Detroit News.

The annual revenue of the royal family of England is about $3,500,000. We don't believe they are worth it.

How many consumers do you suppose were in the audience that cheered Vice President Sherman's defense of standpatism at St. Louis?

Whether the people of Minnesota want local option or not, one thing is certain they will not much longer submit to brewery domination of Minnesota politics.

The Little Falls Herald is correct in prophesying that when county after county shows up in the Democratic state convention instructed for Lind for governor, what the leaders think or do will be immaterial.

If Senator Clapp wants to be classed as a real insurgent he should demand that Minnesota Republicans show their colors and endorse the Indiana idea. But he won't. The senator will be willing to subscribe to any sort of a platform.

Judge Albert Jaques, one of the big lawyers and a thoroughly representative citizen of Duluth, has filed for the Democratic nomination for congress in the Eighth district. Mr. Jaques promises to insurge at Washington just as freely as in Minnesota. In this year of political unrest it would be no surprise if he takes the salp of the present congressman.

A part of the gossip at Washington just now is that during his latest Western trip, planned to begin this week, Mr. Taft will deliver on further eulogies of Mr. Aldrich's tariff law. It is declared that on the contrary, the president will belatedly take cognizance of the objectionable feature of that law and promise the people a genuine revision downward.

This from the St. Paul Dispatch contains truth and logic: The time was when newspapers prided themselves on being party organs. We cannot now think of any of any consequence anywhere which choose to be so regarded. There are a few somewhat subservient, but not many. This is one of the best things that has happened in the newspaper making, so far as it effects the general public newspapers free to discuss party questons, without having to shape their opinions according to ideas and declarations previously formulated by some one else. The result is that people are today getting the straight goods from the newspapers more than they ever did before.

J. A. Bede in Pine City Pioneer: It is getting so that it is impossible to tell whether Minnesota is represented in the United States senate by Republicans or Democrats. It looks as though our senators had stolen the livery of Heaven in which to serve the Devil.

Elk River Star-News: It is sometimes difficult to stand by ones convictions but in the long run it pays to do so. People have an admiration for the sticker, even when he is with the minority.

International Falls Press: There is only one real drawback to Northern Minnesota, and that is the policy of the present state land department—and even that can be changed.

St. Peter Free Press: The people are still waiting for a postal savings bank law and also a parcel post. Both were promised and both are wanted. What is congress going to do about it?

Virginia Enterprise: The idea of teaching every girl to thump the piano and every boy to keep books will make potatoes worth about $8 per barrel in another twenty years.

Hibbing Mesabe Ore: The Republican party has an elephant on its hands, and any attempt to whip the Minnesota Republicans into line for Taft and his administration policies will be the disaster of the party. The idea of "endorsing" Taft is the political buncombe and yellowdogism, but it is the policy of the big spoilsmen who aim to retain control of the nation by yelling partyism to those who still believe that the party, like the king of old, can do no wrong. If the Minnesota Republicans endorse Taft, The Ore hopes they will be honest enough to endorse his tariff law, and his other administration measures, and if the tariff law is condemned the man who gave it to the nation should be condemned likewise. Political quibbling will not go with the thinking voters of Minnesota, and it is a state of political thinkers.

S.S.S. CURES OLD SORES

Every old sore is an infected spot on the flesh, kept open by constant drainage of impure blood into the place.
One of the principal constituents of blood is plasma, a healing property. Where the circulation is pure this element of the blood, which is of a glutinous or sticky nature, performs the necessary work in healing all sores, wounds and lacerations. It does this by sticking or joining the parts together, while nature causes a knitting of the tissues and solidifies the place.
This healing property is frequently destroyed by impure accumulations in the blood, and this vital fluid not only loses its power to heal, but becomes a source of irritation and disease to any open sore or ulcer on the body. Constantly it discharges its morbid matters into the place, and gradually it causes the infection to spread, and the sore enlarges. The morbid matter in the blood comes from different causes. A long spell of debilitating sickness, which breeds disease germs in the system, the retention of the refuse matters of the body because of a sluggish condition of the eliminative members, a continued malarial state of the system, inherited bad blood, etc., are usually responsible.
CURED OF EATING SORE.
Dear Sirs:—I was suffering greatly from a sore on my left breast, which had begun to eat, and at times deep, shooting pains would pass through it, and the ulcer was discharging yellow and rather offensive matter. I consulted physicians, but their treatment did not benefit me very much. My condition seemed hopeless, and I had almost despaired of getting well. I knew that the disease was hereditary in my case, as an only sister, my mother and two of her sisters had died of Cancer of the breast. After I had finished the first bottle of S.S.S. I felt some better, so continued it until I was cured.
MRS. JAMES CABBELL,
Belton, Mo.
S. S. S. heals sores and ulcers in the very simplest way. It just goes into the circulation, and removes the impurities and polluted matter that are the means of keeping the ulcer open; then the sore is bound to heal. S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and not only does it cleanse the circulation, but it adds every necessary property to it to promote good health. It is of the very greatest tonic value, and those who have been weakened and run down by the constitutional drainage of an old sore will find it the very remedy needed. S.S.S. does not simply cause a scab to come over an old sore, but beginning at the bottom it heals the place permanently by building new tissue and filling in the place with firm, healthy flesh. The Case of B. E. Wise

Wise was a big man on the "street."

His deals were larger and involved more money and brains than most men dared to invest.

Wise's wisdom lacked in but one particular—he failed to consider Nature's laws of compensation. The result—Wise gave out. Some said "Old Wise is all in." They were wrong.

Wise's physician said "DIGESTO for those wasted tissues and jaded brain cells."

Wise was soon back in the game—he now has snap and energy to spare.

DIGESTO is a fixture with him.

One of the officials of the Midland railway, coming from Glenwood Springs the other day, was telling a young woman on the train how wonderfully productive Colorado's irrigated ground is.

"Really," he explained, "it's so rich that girls who walk on it have big feet. It just simply makes their feet grow."

"Huh," was the young woman's rejoinder, "some of the Colorado men must have been going around walking on their heads."—Denver Post.

"D-e-f-e-n-d-a-m," spelled the youngster on the rear seat as the "rubberneck" wagon was passing the Twenty-second Regiment armory, at Broadway and Sixty-eighth street. "What does that mean, auntie?"

"I didn't quite catch what the guide said," replied the old lady. "Oh, Mr. Guide, won't you kindly tell us what it says on that building?"

"Def-en-dam!" roared the guide through his megaphone, dividing the word into three sections.

"That's what it is," said the old lady. "A deaf and dumb asylum."

STEWART'S WILL

ECCENTRIC MINNEAPOLIS MILLIONAIRE LEAVES $100,000 TO CHARITY.

NOT MUCH FOR RELATIVES

Brother in Maine Gets the Remainder, Amounting to Five to Ten Million Dollars.

Minneapolis. — With the single exception of gifts of $50,000 each to two Minneapolis charitable institutions and $50,000 for the maintenance of the Stewart Memorial library at Corinna, Maine, the millions of the late "Elder" Levi M. Stewart are bequeathed to his relatives and friends. In all, cash bequests of $486,000 are made, the rest of the estate being awarded to David E. Stewart, Corinna, Maine, brother of the decedent, to be disposed of as he orders.

The will was taken from the safe of the late capitalist in his Kasota building offices and read in the Hennepin county court. It does not reveal the extent of the wealth of "Elder" Stewart, but it indicates that his property may be valued at from $5,000,000 to $12,000,000. The bulk of it is given to the brother, the other relatives being provided for in definite cash bequests.

Fate of Dwelling Undecided.

The little dwelling at Fourth street and Hennepin avenue, nestled in the shadow of the towering buildings around that important corner, and about the disposition of which there has been great interest, probably will remain unaltered for several years at least. The will expresses the wish that Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Gordon, who lived with the "Elder" in the little house for many years, continue to occupy it, rent free, until the estate decides what shall be done with it.

It is thought that "Elder" Stewart gave his brother explicit instructions relative to the disposition of this property as well as other realty holdings in Minneapolis.

Say Building Is Planned.

But two of the heirs of "Elder" Stewart say the estate will not long allow the little frame house to stand on Hennepin avenue. The corner is to be improved by the construction of a modern business block as soon as the estate is settled.

Only $160,000 of the vast estate of the lawyer-capitalist remains in the possession of Minneapolitans. This includes the bequests of $50,000 each to the Home for Children and Aged Women and to the Home for the Aged and Little Sisters of the Poor, and $20,000 each to Lettie M. Crafts, Henry M. Crafts and Leo M. Crafts.

The state will probably get about $300,000 as tax on the estate.

SPERRY FOR CHANCELLOR.

District Pythians Launch Boom for Owatonna Man.

Owatonna.—At the district convention of the Knights of Pythias held here a boom of Albert L. Sperry, of Owatonna Castle No. 50, for grand chancellor was formally launched, and support of Owatonna, Albert Lea, Dodge Center and Mantorville lodges virtually assured to start the campaign. One hundred and fifty delegates were in attendance. Albert Lea was the banner visiting delegation with twenty-five representatives.

In the early part of the evening regular convention work was carried out. Pythian Sisters of Owatonna lodge gave an exhibition drill. This team will exemplify the work at the grand lodge in St. Paul and Minneapolis next week.

The rank of knight was administered to several candidates. A banquet was served and toasts were delivered by prominent Pythians among these being Albert Sperry, Dr. J. H. Adair and H. S. Dart, of Owatonna, J. P. Hurley and J. P. Peterson, of Albert Lea, and Prof. Bell, of Dodge Center.

DEFENDS HOMESTEAD.

Thief River Falls Resident Seeks To Enjoin Sheriff.

Crookston.—Contending that a residence belonging to him is the remaining portion of a homestead, and that therefore it is exempt from execution upon a civil judgment, George Elder, of Thief River Falls, appeared before Judge Watts in the district court here and secured a restraining order against the sheriff of Red Lake county.

The property in question is valued at about $2,000.

In the restraining order issued, the sheriff is required to show cause why he should not be permanently enjoined from making the sale under the execution proposed.

TANK EXPLODES WITH ROAR.

Man Standing Beside It Escapes Entirely Uninjured.

Minneapolis.—A five hundred gallon gasoline tank, partly filled with gas, exploded with terrific force in the sheet metal works of D. M. Allen, 311 Sixth avenue south.

One end of the huge galvanized cylinder hurtled 40 feet through the air and crashed through the wall of a shed. No one was injured, although D. M. Allen, manager of the company, was standing beside the tank.

$10,000 Fire in St. Cloud.

St. Cloud. — A night fire of supposed incendiary origin destroyed the stone polishing sheds of the Jones brothers. The loss is about $10,000 which is only partially covered by insurance. Twenty-five men are temporarily thrown out of employment.

Washington, D. C. — Dr. James E. Moore of Minneapolis and Dr. Charles H. Mayo of Rochester, are here to attend the annual convention of the National Association of Surgeons.

STATE IS SLUGGARD.

Red Lake Development Association Believes Opportunities Lost.

Thief River Falls.—The organization of the Red Lake County Development Association has been completed in this city. Representatives from all the towns and several of the rural communities of the county met at the Aniers club rooms in this city and perfected the county organization by electing Daniel Shaw, of Thief River Falls, president, Daniel Patterson, of St. Hilaire, treasurer, and A. H. Baker, of Red Lake Falls, secretary.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, We believe that the State of Minnesota has not been alive to its opportunities and has, through a policy of inaction, permitted a large immigration to pass through and out of the state without making a proper and legitimate effort to place before the people of the nation its many advantages as a desirable place of residence; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we urge upon the coming legislature of the state that it adopt a more liberal policy of advertisement of the advantages afforded by Minnesota to homeseekers, and that we hereby pledge ourselves to withhold our support from any legislative candidate at the approaching election who does not express himself as entirely favorable to such a policy.

"Further, we reaffirm the resolutions adopted at the Bemidji convention in favor of legislative reapportionment and will refuse our support to any candidate for either the senate or house of representatives who is not known to be in favor of reapportionment. Further

"Resolved, That at this time we pledge our old and financial support to the Northern Minnesota Development Association, recently organized at Bemidji, and commend the vigorous and businesslike manner in which its officers have prosecuted the good work there begun.

DEMOCRATS IN MILL CITY.

Apportionment of Delegates Is Based on Last Gubernatorial Vote.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis has been selected as the place of the Democratic state convention by the executive committee of the Democratic state central committee. The date is July 28. The county convention will be held July 23 and the primaries July 20, unless otherwise provided by the county committee.

The appointment of delegates calls for a convention of 1,043 delegates. The apportionment is based on the vote cast for Governor Johnson in the last election. One delegate is allowed to each 200 votes cast for Governor Johnson and each county is given two delegates-at-large, with the exception of Hennepin, Ramsey and St. Louis, which are given five delegates-at-large.

This gives Hennepin county 142 delegates, Ramsey 200 delegates and St. Louis 50 delegates.

The time for the giving two delegates-at-large to each county with five delegates-at-large to the three largest counties was proposed in opposition to the plan of the Republicans of giving five delegates-at-large to every county, thus giving the counties outside of the cities a bigger vote in the convention.

COOLEY AT WILLMAR.

Says Drainage and Good Foundation Good Road's Necessity.

Willmar.—"Drainage and a good foundation are the two great essentials in road making," said George W. Cooley, engineer and secretary of the state highway commission, in addressing the good roads rally here. "Of course material means something, too, but it is really secondary. Even sand or gumbo, if treated right, can make fair roads. The only trouble is that we have paid but little attention to the science of road making, and still less to maintenance.

"The highway commission is doing its best to show the people how to make the right kind of roads, but it is handicapped by the fact that Minnesota has no law of maintenance. We need such a law, and need it badly."

Mr. Cooley illustrated his lecture with views taken on his recent trip through Europe.

The rally was the most successful ever held in this part of the state. Pathmasters and town supervisors from every part of the country were present and there were representatives from neighboring counties.

$10,00 Fire in West Duluth.

Duluth. — Fire, which originated from an oil can in the rear of a grocery store, did $10,000 damage at West Duluth. Two two-story buildings owned by Thomas Fouhister were damaged and the occupants suffered loss on stocks and furniture. The total insurance will not exceed one-half of the loss. The ground floors of the building were occupied by M. L. Olander, drug store; William Strevel, grocery and a saloon. The second floors were occupied as residences.

Annual Gathering Southeastern Congregational Conference.

Winona.—The fifth annual meeting of the Southeastern Conference of Congregational Churches of Minnesota will be held at Mantorville, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 10 and 11. One of the principal addresses will be made by Dr. T. S. Devitt, of this city, on "The Church and the Immigrant." Reports will be made from all the churches in the conference on various phases of their work.

AGED SPINSTER DYING.

Duluth. — Miss Victoria Kasehura, who is the oldest old maid in Minnesota and possibly the oldest in the entire country, is near to death at the age of 104 years. The aged spinster is a native of Germany. She has been bedridden for the past three years and resides with her niece, Mrs. C. Marshall.

Of late her mind has become clouded and she talks of things that happened when she was a little girl. Dissolution is looked for at any time.

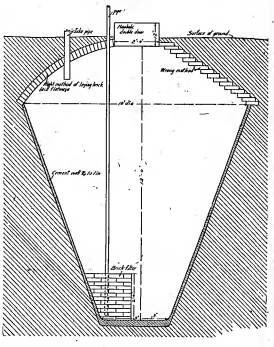
Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

Cistern On the Farm.

A cistern on the farm can be easily and cheaply constructed. Most of the work can be done by the farmer himself, while the materials necessary are of an inexpensive character, consisting chiefly of a few barrels of Portland cement and a few bricks. Mr. C. E. ...own, of Elk River, tells the Farmers' Institutes how successfully he constructed one in a sandy soil. He first dug the cistern full size and depth desired, but gave the sides more slant than he would have done in a clay soil. This to prevent caving. He says the walls were made by plastering against the sides of the dirt with a good, rich cement mortar. Two coats were used. The right coat consisted of one part cement and three parts screened, sharp sand. The second coat was made of one part cement and two parts sand. The first coat was allowed to "set" a little while before the second one was put on, but both were applied in one day. Do not trowel the first coat; just take what the trowel will hold and make a straight stroke side ways (not up and down), because the end of the trowel will dig into the sides of the cistern. Leave no place uncovered in either coat. The second coat can be smoothed a little more than the first one, but it cannot be made smooth enough with a trowel. While the mortar is still soft take a whitewash brush, wet it and brush the wall.

Leave the bottom until the cistern is otherwise all done and then clean out all the rubbish. Now, cement the bottom partly over, and lay a board on that part to stand on while putting the cement on the remainder of the bottom. Make the bottom about three inches thick.



Cut showing construction of cement cistern in sandy soil. Note proper and improper method of laying brick for arch.

After the cement is set enough, say the next day, build the filter. No cistern is complete without one. It may be about two bricks or sixteen inches square and two feet high. The filter is simply a brick box in the bottom of the cistern into which the pipe connected with the pump extends. It is laid up as tight as possible with cement mortar mixed about one part cement to three parts sand.

To make the top of the filter, lay some iron strips across to hold the brick on the top, then lay on the brick and cover with about one-half inch of cement mortar on top. Set the pipe in and wedge it tight. Make the connection while the filter is being made, so that the pipes may not be loosened after the mortar is set. Let the pipe extend to within two inches of the bottom of the filter. The water will run into the bricks as fast as it can be pumped out, and it is always clear and much purer than unfiltered water.

Build the arch by starting low enough so the top of it will just come even with the top of the ground, if the cistern is to be built out of doors. A cistern under the house causes more or less dampness and rots the sills and joists.

Start the arch one-fourth of the diameter of the cistern below the surface of the ground. For a cistern measuring ten feet across the top, the arch should be started two and a half feet below the surface. The manhole at the top should be built up about a foot above the ground, and have two covers with an air space between them to prevent freezing. Dig back of the walls of the cistern and start laying the bricks the same as for any other arch, so that the weight will come on the solid ground instead of on the walls. (See cut.)

Lay the bricks on a slant as shown in the cut. They may look as though they would not stay, but they will. When the course is laid clear around they will bind themselves. When the next course is started, break joints the same as in any other brick work.

Keep the inside as smooth as possible. Plaster the arch inside and outside with cement mortar. Don't forget to put in an intake pipe near the top of the arch. An old pump cylinder makes a good one, but a piece of four inch drain tile makes a better one and will not rust. A staging may be built inside the cistern to work on while building the arch. When all is done, we have a cistern that will not hold water until it is coated with a wash made quite thick of pure Portland cement—just thin enough to spread easily. With a whitewash brush give the inside of the cistern a good coat of this cement. The cistern is then complete and will hold water.

Wetting the walls thoroughly and then going over them while wet with a whitewash brush and dry Portland cement is recommended also as a reliable way of making the walls water tight.

Prof. Robertson, of the Crookston Experiment station, who recently died, told the Farmers' Institute of a method of making cisterns in a clay soil that proved eminently satisfactory. An egg-shaped hole was dug in the clay, narrowing the hole to the proper size at the top, and plastering onto the earth with cement mortar, the same as outlined for work on sandy walls. Such cisterns may be made with or without a brick arch. To arch such a cistern with brick, a shelf should be cut in the earth at a point where it is desired to begin the arch. This shelf may be the width of a brick. From here up the arch may be made just as described for the cistern made in sand. Made as directed these cisterns will last for years without giving any trouble, unless they are cracked by freezing. In that case the cracks may be washed with a coating of cement as described for a finishing coat for a new cistern.

Time of Sowing.

Early Spring is the best time to sow a lawn, as grass makes a better growth during the cool, moist weather of Spring than later. July and August are usually too dry.

Seeding Banks.

Trouble is often experienced in getting grass to grow on a steep slope. This is usually because the heavy rains wash the seed out before it becomes established. This may be prevented by running a heavy board along the top of the slope, to turn the water to some convenient place where a box culvert may carry the water over the edge of the slope until the sod is established. It is also a good plan to sow plenty of seed.

Mowing.

As soon as the grass is high enough it should be kept mowed with the lawn mower, as this makes a thicker, closer stand of grass. The clipping may remain on the ground if not too heavy, and protect the plants from drying out.

LEROY CADY,
Assistant Horticulturist,
University of Minnesota.

The Plum Curculio and Codling Moth are destructive of fruit. Spray the trees now with arsenate of lead or arsenate of soda and water, or in place of water use Bordeaux mixture; spray again just as the blossoms fall; again ten days later. Eighty per cent of the fruit can be saved. Three pounds of arsenate of lead, to fifty gallons of water or Bordeaux mixture, should be used for the curculio; Paris green arsenite of lime or arsenate of lead kills the insects.

DUST FROM THE SOIL.

Three Kernels of Corn in a hill give best results when seed is of good quality, testing 100 per cent.

Careless Methods of Farming often result in filling the ground with weeds.

Farm life may be made dismal by shutting in the home so that teams and people cannot be seen when passing along the road.

A Money Advantage in Planting Corn over small grain comes from the cultivation of the soil and cleaning the land of foul weeds. Corn should be cultivated well. Planting in check rows has an advantage over drills, for it can be cultivated both ways.

Don't plant corn in a heavy, cold soil if it can be avoided. There is more money in keeping the seed in the sack until the soil can be properly prepared than in such planting.

Much LABOR is wasted in doing work around barns and sheds when it is necessary to work in the mud. Therefore when building a barn be sure to locate it where the water will run off.

MAKING LARGE LENS

New Reflector for Mount Wilson Expected to Reveal Wonders.

Weighs Five Tons and Must Be Carried Up Hill a Mile High—Many Difficulties to Be Overcome in Mounting.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Recently there appeared in a British periodical an article written by an Englishman seriously discussing the theory that Andrew Carnegie and Dr. George E. Hale had built the observatory on Mount Wilson in an endeavor to get a corner on solar energy. The article has caused amusement in scientific circles, where the Mount Wilson observatory is looked upon as the greatest contribution that has yet been made to the science of astronomy.

In spite of the fact that the big "snow telescope" is visible from Los Angeles, there is probably little conception here of the importance the observatory promises to play in the development of astronomical science. The coming of the famous astronomers of the world this summer for a convention here will do more to call attention to the progress of Los Angeles as a scientific center than anything that has yet occurred.

Within a month or six weeks there will be an item of news at the observatory which will interest the entire world. It will be known at that time whether the 100-inch lens recently cast in France is to be a success or not. If it is, new secrets of the heavens will be revealed as soon as it can be set up on Mount Wilson.

The attempt to cast the big reflector was once before made and the result was a failure. It takes several months for the big casting to cool and the second one is in that process now. The first reports are that it will probably come out all right.

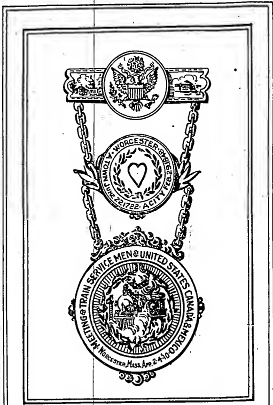
Mr. Carnegie's recent visit to Mount Wilson means that the dome for this new instrument will be provided without question. The success of the 60-inch reflector now in use assures the support of the Carnegie Institute and its founder. The new building will be expensive and will complete the construction so far as Dr. Hale's plans go. The original plans for the observatory are already fulfilled in the equipment in daily use.

Some idea of the difficulties to be overcome in mounting the big lens that is coming will be gained from the fact that it weighs five tons. This piece of glass must be hung so that it will move with perfect ease in order to be kept in a fixed position by the clockwork attachment which overcomes the motion of the earth. Dr. Hale's invention is a steel bearing floating in mercury, a principle in use on the 60-inch lens which weighs one ton.

Astronomers originally doubted the efficiency of the larger lenses. It has been demonstrated that the spectra of the stars are increased in a ratio corresponding to the size of the lens, and with the 100-inch disc there are remarkable possibilities of developing new facts in regard to the universe.

This lens, weighing five tons, will have to be transported to the top of a mountain a mile high, where tons of the original material for construction had to be packed over a narrow trail on the backs of burros. The wagon trail built for the purpose of getting the 60-inch lens to the top will again prove indispensable.

TAFT DECORATED BY RAILROAD MEN



TOWN A WORCESTER MASS. JUNE 22 1722 A CITY FEB. 29 1848
MEETING TRAIN SERVICE MEN OF UNITED STATES CANADA & MEXICO
WORCESTER, MASS. APR. 2-4-10

TRAINMEN'S GIFT TO TAFT

WASHINGTON.—President Taft has just been awarded one of the two crosses presented annually by the American Cross of Honor, but he does not seem as proud of this as of the beautiful decoration given him by the railroad men at their recent international convention in Worcester, Mass. It is a solid gold affair, and cost about $300, but its chief value in the eyes of Mr. Taft is the assurance its presentation bears of his popularity among the men who operate the trains of the United States, Canada and Mexico.

An interesting operation is going on at present in the construction of a vertical solar telescope. It was found that for longer observations of certain phenomena of the sun the snow telescope did not offer the best conditions, although it fulfilled the purpose for which it was built.

In order to test his idea of a vertical tower, Dr. Hale had a water tower erected and made steady by guy ropes. With this he obtained such good results that he decided upon a vertical tower. This is to be 165 feet in height in order to give a focal length of 150 feet from the reflector to the point where the image is recorded. With the equipment he will be able to get an image of the sun 16 inches in diameter.

In order to use a tower 165 feet in height for photographic purposes and long exposures, where the subject is simply a ray of light, it was necessary to resort to novel means for avoiding vibration. It took months of wrestling with the problem to work out the comparatively simple idea of erecting a double tower, no parts of which should touch each other. The outer tower, which takes all the vibration of the wind, is built of hollow shafts.

With this instrument the spectroscope of the sun's rays will be increased from a length of 18 feet to 75 feet, giving a broader opportunity for analyis. This tower will be completed in time for use at the astronomical congress this summer.

Many Bugs in Collection

University of Kansas Possesses 130,000 Specimens That Are Worth $47,000.

Kansas City, Mo.—Prof. S. J. Hunter of the entomological department of the University of Kansas has just finished invoicing the collection of insects belonging to the university and has valued them at $47,000. The collection was begun by Dr. F. H. Snow in 1878 and now numbers approximately 130,000 specimens, all of which are labeled and mounted for use in the classes of the department. The collection probably would sell for $50,000 if the university would part with it.

Beetles, flies and butterflies make up the larger share of the collection. Most of the specimens are of American insects, though a fair foreign collection has been built up by exchanging with foreign collectors. This exchange is going on all the time and the university collection is now one of two or three best collections owned by educational institutions in the world. By far the larger share of the insects were collected by Dr. Snow and his students in the summer vacations, and the cost to the university was very small.

"We have one of the best collections in America," Prof. Hunter said, "and it is arranged in such a way as to make all of it useful to our students. We are going to keep adding to it until it is absolutely the best we can make it. Prof. Hunter and his students collected insects in the summer of 1897, 1898 and 1899.

One of the most useful and interesting to the state is the collection of harmful insects that has been arranged. All the known Kansas crop pests are mounted together with samples of their devastations. It is in this line of work that Prof. Hunter is specializing his advance students.

Must Pay for Widow's Cow

Adjustment of Famous Port Arthur Siege Case—Milk Given to the Wounded.

St. Petersburg. — Russia's indomitable business woman, Mme. Stoessel, has just been ordered by the Moscow civil court to hand over 120 rubles, or about $62, to Mme. Rouddky, widow of a Russian officer. The case began in 1906. It proved to turn upon the prowess of General Stoessel's wife as queen of the Port Arthur provision trust during the Japanese seige of that place. Mme. Stoessel had already withstood the attacks of beleaguered civilians who complained to the government that after she had worked a corner in fowls she got her husband, as commandant of the fortress, to fix the selling price of eggs in Port Arthur.

Mme. Rouddky informed the court that at the outbreak of the war she owned a cow and two calves. When the siege began she left Port Arthur and handed over her dairy business to her husband, who died soon afterward. Mme. Stoessel thereupon appropriated her cow. The plaintiff estimated that Mme. Stoessel sold a thousand rubles' worth of milk before selling the animal for 120 rubles.

Mme. Stoessel admitted selling the cow, but declared she had given all the milk to the wounded. Moreover, the cow, she said, was injured when she found it.

The court decided that she must refund the price of the cow, 120 rubles, but Mme. Rouddky had to pay the costs of the suit. She did not receive judgment for her milk claim.

Must Wear Birdless Hats.

Trenton, N. J.—The Audubon society bill put in by Assemblyman Hedcliffe, making it a misdemeanor for women to wear feathers, wings, or bodies of birds for personal adornment was put through the house by a vote of 33 to 11.

If the senate passes it Governor Fort will sign it, and spring styles for New Jersey women must undergo a change at once or many women will be in jail.

College Bars Towels.

Houghton, Mich.—Towels have been tabooed at the Michigan College of Mines. This does not mean that soap also has been put under the ban, but that the faculty has decided that towels are relics of barbarism and are insanitary and expensive. When a student now washes his hands and face he uses a big sheet of paper for drying purposes and then throws it into a waste basket.

Punctual Editor Snubs King.

St. Petersburg.—An unusual episode marked King Peter's last day in St. Petersburg. The king made an appointment to receive M. Souverein, editor of Novoe Vremya, and when the editor arrived at the precise hour he found the king was out visiting. M. Souverein went home.

When the king, on his return to the palace, renewed the invitation by telephone, M. Souverein declined to accept it.

Motor for Farm Purposes

Use of Gasoline Machines in Agricultural Pursuits Is Extending Rapidly.

Washington.—Consul Frank Deedmeyer, Charlottestown, directs attention to the growing use of motors for fishing and agricultural purposes in Canada:

On land, on sea, and in the air the use of the gasoline motor is extending rapidly. Its great utility, combined with economy, in the fisheries and upon the farm, is now fully recognized in the maritime provinces of Canada. Here is a most promising field for American manufacturers. The race is to the swift. Those who would cultivate this rich opportunity must act at once. Fishermen, a conservative folk, were slow to equip their craft with gasoline motors. During the fishing season of 1909 about 15 per cent. of the fishing boats and vessels were provided with this motor power. The boats and vessels so equipped had such palpable advantages over those using sail propulsion that the most conservative fisherman now realizes that he can no longer compete if he has to contend with the contrary winds, while his more progressive neighbor can bring his catch to shore speedily and surely.

The fishing fleets of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edwards Island, consist, according to official returns, of 26,315 boats and 1,082 vessels. Nova Scotia is credited with 16,121 of these craft, New Brunswick with 9,393, and Prince Edward Island with 1,883. Within the next few years this entire fleet will be supplied with gasoline motors.

The number of farmers of these three provinces, according to the last Dominion census, is 107,630, all of whom own the farms which they till, except 2,692, who are lessees. Agriculture, owing to the constantly rising prices of farm products, is remunerative. These farmers are generally well to do, progressive, employing agricultural implements and other labor-saving devices. The gasoline motor has just commenced to displace on the farm the windmill, animal power, and the steam engine, used in pumping water, threshing and crushing grains, cutting wood, and for various other purposes. The superiority of the gasoline motor of American make is universally conceded. Canadian manufacturers of this article usually advertise their motors as being constructed upon the latest designs secured from the United States.

AN INTOLERABLE ITCHING

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but it grew steadily worse until, when I combed my hair, the scalp became raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching, in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch and smart when first beginning to heal. Combing my hair was positive torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep a short time, that awful stinging pain —would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies —Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humor. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first time I took six or seven bottles of Cuticura Pills and the last time three bottles—neither an expensive or tedious treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

"This is a voluntary, unsolicited testimonial and I take pleasure in writing it, hoping my experience may help someone else. Miss Lillian Brown, R. F. D. 1, Liberty, Me., Oct. 29, 1909."

Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. God Bless Us Every One!

"God bless us every one!" prayed Tiny Tim,
Crippled and dwarfed of body, yet so tall
Of soul we tiptoe earth to look on him,
High towering over all.

He loved the loveless world nor dreamed, indeed,
That it at best could give to him the while
But pitying glances when his only need
Was but a cheery smile.

And thus he prayed, "God bless us every one!"
Infolding all the creeds within the span
Of his child heart, and so, despising none,
Was nearer saint than man.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Mixed His Poetry.

Mixed metaphors, absentmindedness and inattention have caused many laughable incidents. Teachers in the elementary grades of the public schools especially hear many of these amusing "breaks."

One day a bright youth in one of the higher grades of a Kensington school during an elocution period furnished an addition to the long list. He mixed up two poets with a result that provoked much laughter in the school. He quoted, or, rather, misquoted, as follows:

Oh, woman, in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy and hard to please;
But, seeing too oft, become familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

—Philadelphia Times.

A New Case of English Humor.

Two southerners were entertaining an Englishman when one of them told the following story:

"There was a poor white in our county named Yarrow, whom every one thought dishonest, but who had never been caught stealing. At last he got too bold, and through the testimony of a Mr. Brown he was sent to jail. Soon after Yarrow served his sentence Mr. Brown was obliged to go to Baltimore and have his eyes operated upon. A much exaggerated account of the operation reached the county and was told to Yarrow.

"'I wish ter gracious,' said that worthy, 'that when the doctor took out that old Brown's eyes he'd dropped 'em on the floor and the cat had got 'em!'"

At the conclusion of the story the other southerner laughed heartily, but the Englishman was horrified. "Just think," he said, "of having a cat in the room when such a serious operation was being performed!"—Lippincott's.

The Men Behind.

While Mr. Bede has much to say about Mr. Lorimore's humble beginnings, his many virtues and the great prominence he has attained, it may perhaps be as well to recall just one other circumstance in Mr. Lorimor's career. He was a member of the lower house of congress when the law to tax oleomargarine was passed. He took a strong stand on behalf of the oleomargarine industry. In fact he led the fight against the interests of the dairymen of the nation. The same fight is up again. Indeed for some weeks now hearings have been taking place. This week the dairymen are presenting their side of the case, being represented among others by E. K. Slater, former dairy commissioner of Minnesota, now secretary of the national dairy union, and W. F. Schilling of Northfield, president of the Minnesota Dairymen's association. Of course there may be no connection between the purchase of a seat for Mr. Lorimore in the United States senate and the fight the Chicago packers are making in favor of the reduction of the tax on oleomargarine, but at the same time there can be no harm come of considering things seemingly related at the same time.

The Lieutenant Governorship.

As to what may happen beyond nominating Governor Eberhart to head the Republican state ticket everybody seems to be at sea, except that there is a sort of crowding to get on the administration band wagon. The latest talk is of a Mr. Neil of Red Wing being the new candidate for lieutenant governor. Mr. Neil is at the head of the federated commercial clubs of the state and has been quite active in the conservation movement. He is well spoken of, but if he is a candidate there does not seem to be any warrant to conclude that Goodhue county will not go, as has been all along anticipated to Dr. Gates who has been long in the field and who is naturally counting on a strong delegation from the Third District.

A Man in Ambush.

The latesst hear I about the contest for lieuteant governor, however, and it was from one who is in position to know what is going on behind the scenes, is the man who will get his nomination has not yet been named. "Eberhart," said the gentleman in question, "is pretty foxy and has a strong card up his sleeve, which he will play at the psychological moment." This language must not be taken literally. Far be it from me to suggest on the part of the govrenor any familarity with either any game of cards or with the code which goverus those accustomed to hundle the pasteboards.

Gorden Apparently Confident.

However, be that as it may, there is some reason to consider that the position occupied by S. Y. Gordon, the editor candidate from Browns Valley, is a strong one. If he has support outside his county option friends, which I am inclined to believe, he is likely to show up at the convention with more strength than has been anticipated. Indeed I think there are likely to be some surprises in store for those who think to belittle the efforts temperance people are making. I am told that the campaign being conducted in many of the smaller cities of the state is proving effective. I know that in Minneapolis there is a strong element which favors county option certain to stand up in the legislature and at the polls if not at the state convention. Of course in St. Paul Dur Reese runs the politics for us and on the temperance question we have at least the satisfation of knowing where we are at.

After the High Boss.

Speaking about Minneapolis I learn that it is regarded as by no means certain that E. D. Simth will be chosen as the Republican party's candidate for the senate. Carl Wallace is giving him a hot race and Carl isn't particularly strong. Indeed it is said that if some man were opposing him less mixed up in the factional fights of the district Smith wouldn't be in it. It is said to be certain anyway if Smith does get the nomination that an independent candidate will be put in he field against him with good prospects of success. In view of this there is some talk of Smith's throwing up the sponge altogether to become chairman of the Republican State Central committee and later the governor's private secretary and political manager. I learn that Frank Nimocks who was a member of the last house has Senator Calhoun, Smith's alter ego, beaten to a frazzle. There are some things about the representation of the metropolis of the northwest which are decidedly queer.

WHAT IS ADJUSTING?

Someone has said, "An adjusted watch is a watch in perfect order." This is literally true for that is what adjustment means and what it attempts to secure. The word "adjust" is derived from Latin words, "ad" and "justice," just right. This expresses it. When a watch is perfectly adjusted it is just right and when it is just right it is a perfect time piece. This is a condition to be aimed for and although we can never hope to attain it, yet it is encouraging to know that we are steadily advancing to a closer approximation. Every error in a watch has some underlying cause. The correction of an error depends, first, on discovering the cause and, second, on removing it. Theory often aids us in determining the cause, but it requires patient experimenting and persistent practice to remove it. Nature's forces and the Laws of Mechanics are our sole reliance in accomplishing this. They furnish both the cause and the remedy. Temperature error is a notable example of this fact. The expansion and contraction of metal is the cause of temperature error. The same law of expansion and contraction is applied to correct the error. We obtain similar results in position work by the use of the laws of acceleration and retardation which furnish both the cause and the remedy of many errors.

SUNKIST ORANGES

We pick, pack and ship 60% of the California Orange crop. These are of varying grades. The choicest selections are packed under the "Sunkist" label. To get the finest oranges you must insist on fruit that is wrapped in tissue paper with the word "Sunkist" printed thereon.

"Sunkist" Navel Oranges Are Seedless

They are delightfully sweet, juicy and fiberless. They are firm, thin skinned and deep tinted.

"Sunkist" oranges and lemons are picked by gloved hands, wrapped in "Sunkist" tissue paper, packed carefully so as to eliminate chances of becoming bruised or soft. No bruised fruit or fruit that falls to the ground is put in a "Sunkist" wrapper.

Look for "Sunkist" on the wrapper. Ask your dealer for oranges and lemons with "Sunkist" label on the tissue paper wrapper. Oranges and lemons without "Sunkist" wrappers are not "Sunkist" brand. Be sure you get oranges and lemons in their original "Sunkist" wrappers.

Automobile Ride.

Frank Hovald

Frank Hovold, son of Mr and Mrs Frank Hovold who reside two miles southeast of the city, died Thursday, May 19. The deceased, a young man twenty one years old, was taken seriously ill while on his way to church Sunday morning, May 8. He was taken to the residence of Rev. Fr. Ambrose where he was cared for and given every possible attention but to no avail.

Funeral services were held at St. Mary's church, of which deceased was a member, Saturday morning, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating, and interment was at the church cemetery.

The condition of E. E. Baker, who was seriously injured a few weeks ago by being kicked in the face by a horse, continues to improve. For a time it was thought that Mr. Baker had lost the sight of one eye, but he is now able to distinguish light from dark and it is possible that the eye has not been permanently injured.

J. N. Nimesgern and his father, who had been making his home here since Mrs Liffrig came, took the remains to Mazeppa Friday evening and the funeral was held at that place.

A sister of the deceased, Mrs. Daskin of Wabasha, was also in attendance at the funeral.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETES WILL COMPETE

Meet of Red River Valley Association at Crookston on Saturday

Red Lake Falls High School Will be Represented by Small Team

Supt. L. V. Koos, and four high school boys, Robert Zaiser, Marcus Marshall, George Tandberg and Theodore Tandberg, will go to Crookston Saturday for the field meet of the Red River Valley Athletic association.

Red Lake's team is a small one and for that reason the boys will have to do some strenuous work to make a showing. One of the boys will participate in six events, one in five and each of the other two in four and in some of the events Red Lake Falls will not be represented at all. Even if they have a strenuous job before them, the boys expect to make a few points. With such a small team it is hardly possible that they will be near the top in the scoring.

BUILD STATE DITCHES

State Spending Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars in Red River Valley

Contracts entailing the expenditure of $365,000 for draining portions of the Red River Valley of Minnesota, and a district in Koochiching county, have been let by George A. Ralph, State Drainage Engineer, and the work will begin at once. Ditch 83, which includes the straightening and deepening of Thief River which runs in a southerly direction across Marshall County, will be constructed by two companies, the northern half being let to Forrestal and Peyen of Saint Paul, for $77,085.81, and the lower portion to D. B. Stevenson of Cleveland, O., for $72,649.14. The prices asked by the bidders ranged from 7.8 cents to 8.9 per cubic yard. Thief River, when straightened and deepened, will receive the water from a system which, with lateral branches and ditches already constructed, will cover 600 miles in length and drain 600,000 acres.

The ditch in the southeastern part of Kittson county near Karlstad will be 30 miles in length, and will be built by the Standard Drainage company of Windom, Minn, for $10,362.53. The ditch in Roseau county will be 125 miles in length, and will drain approximately 125,000 acres. Foley and Gleason of Aitkin, Minn., will construct it for $143,340. The ditch in Koochiching county near Big Falls, is 18 miles in length, will be built by the same firm for $30,089.50. Taxes will be levied on all properties, including state lands, to pay the cost.

Omer Hall, upon his return from the Great Northern agents' meeting Monday morning did not wish to leave the train when it reached Red Lake Falls, no doubt due to the fact that he is not familiar with the surroundings at the Great Northern depot. Members of the crew argued with him until the train was half way to St. Hilaire before they could persuade him that he ought to get off.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT EVENTS

Baccalaureate Sermon at Presbyterian Church Sunday Evening

Commencement Address by Sen. S. D. Works on Friday Evening, June 3.

Sixteen young people, members of the class of 1910, will graduate from the Red Lake Falls high school this year. The first of the commencement events, the presentation of the class play, is now high school history. The play was given twice before "capacity houses" and was enthusiastically received.

The baccalaureate sermon is to be delivered by Rev. Lewis T. Hughes. That event is to occur at the Presbyterian church Monday evening, May 29.

The commencement address is to be delivered by Senator S. D. Works of Mankato at the Bijou theatre Friday evening, June 3. Senator Works is one of the state's prominent men and has at various times been suggested as possible candidate for governor. His address will be worth hearing.

Following are the names of the young people who are members of the class of 1910:

Here's to Dad!

I happened in a home the other day and over the parlor door saw a legend worked in red letters, "What is a Home Without a Mother." Across the room was another brief. "God Bless Our Home."

Now what's the matter with "God Bless Our Dad?" He gets up early, lights the fire, boils an egg, grabs his dinner pail and wipes off the dew of the lawn with his boots while many a mother is sleeping. He makes the weekly handout for the butcher, the grocer and the milkman and his little pile is badly worn before he has been home an hour. He stands off the bailiff and keeps the rent paid up.

If there is a noise during the night, dad is kicked in the back and made to go down stairs and kill the burglar. Mother darns the socks, but dad bought the socks in the first place, and the needles and the yarn afterwards. Mother does up the fruit; well, dad bought it all, and jars and sugar cost like the duce.

Dad buys chicken for the Sunday dinner, carves that himself, and draws the neck from the ruins after everyone else is served. "What is Home Without a Mother?" Yes, that is all right, but what is home without a father? Dad, here's to you. You've got your faults—you may have lots of them—but your all right.

A Runaway.

The athletic performance scheduled as a base ball game between Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls Sunday afternoon, was more like a track meet or firemen's tournament, with Thief River doing most of the running, than like a ball game. Red Lake Falls got two scores; Thief River Falls more than a dozen. No one is responsible for the defeat. It was a contest to see which Red Lake player could give the pitcher the poorest support.

Red Lake Falls and Fosston will play at Fosston Sunday.

Horses, Horses, Horses.

I will be here on May 31st with 2 carloads of broken and unbroken horses. Now is your chance to buy good horses cheap.—Louis Sleff, owner.

BORCHERS AND MORIN

Fred Borchers and Fred Morin Are Incorporators of New Company

Fred Borchers and Fred Morin, who recently went to Missoula, Mont., to engage in the lumber business, have associated themselves with a Mr. Riberdy, owner of valuable timber lands and saw mill property, and the three have incorporated as the Riberdy Lumber company. The many friends in Red Lake Falls of Messrs. Borchers and Morin will wish them success in the new venture. The following from a Missoula paper tells of the organization of the new company:

Articles of incorporation of the Riberdy Lumber company were filed in the office of the county clerk yesterday. The Riberdy Lumber company has been in existence for some time, but is to be materially strengthened by the addition of two new men to the company. The men who have bought in with Mr. Riberdy are Fred Morin and Fred Borchers. Mr. Morin comes from Crookson, Minn., and has had much experience in the lumber business, as he was in full charge of the T. N. Robertson Lumber company's yards at that place. Mr. Borchers has had much experience in the lumber business and should prove of much value to the firm. The officers as named in the articles are: Mr. Riberdy, president; Fred Borchers, vice-president and treasurer; Fred Morin, secretary and general manager. The company is in readiness to handle all business transacted by lumber yards and should have a prosperous future.

GAME OF THE PUBLICITY AGENTS

They Hope to Reap Harvest Out of State Advertising Campaign

Wm. J. Bryan Talks About "Personal Liberty" and Other Things

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, May 24.—Word has gone out that there must be more talk of Conservation. The State capitol politicians are getting nervous about the publicity given the work it was hoped would be kept subrosa which is being done by trusty lieutenants under the direction of Brigadier General Reese. From various quarters the warning has been sent that altogether too much is made of the formation of Liberty leagues and kindred organizations, and that more trouble may be had than was anticipated in rounding up Eberhart delegates unless the attention of the voters is distracted in some way. The thing to do now, say the campaign managers, is for everybody to talk Conservation. The term is so delightfully vogue is one thing that recommends it. It can be made to mean anything as circumstances require. And really the fact that it isn't an issue at all is what recommends it most. Still there may be phases of it to which exception may be made and the governor appears to have stumbled on to one of them.

For Revenue Only.

There has for some years been here in St. Paul a bunch of so-called publicity agents who have long been itching for a chance to get a whack at the state treasury. Graduallly they find that all other sources of income are running dry. They have worked their graft on the railroads until the railroads found out it didn't pay. They fastened themselves like leeches on the municipality of St. Paul until they made even the politicians of the city hall tired. They have milked our commercial bodies dry. Even the brewers' organization refused to be held up any longer—no substantial results being forthcoming. At the first note of the conservation movement they had their eyes open to the opportunities it held for them and for months now they have made the funds accumulated by its projecters a source of revenue, and, I am told, have made serious inroads on the governor's contingent fund.

Holding Up the State.

However, these sources of profitable exploitation have been pretty well exhausted without in any appreciable degree satisfying an insatiate appetite for public plunder. Preparations are now under way to make a raid on the legislature under the specious pretense of advertising the state. Naturally a willing auxiliary is found in St. Paul's newspaper consolidation, which, wherever public printing is in sight, proves to be a remarkably close corporation, or as Bro. Paradis put it the other day in a communication addressed to the city council, "a 'come along' in a political hold-up."

Working the Governor.

The smooth confidence men to whom I have referred have, I learn from a circular which has recently been issued from the executive office, managed to enlist the governor in the good cause of finding them continued profitable occupation. They have so worked on the governor's feelings that he has promised to take the initiative and to exercise the influence of the executive office to secure a nice fat appropriation "to advertise the state." The appropriation once made the expert publicity agents can be depended upon to do the rest. Of course "advertising the state" sounds good to the country newspaper man, who up to date has done more to advertise the state than any and every other agency combined and will no doubt continue to do so. Indeed no one knows that better than the consolidated society of publicity sharks who for many months have been exploiting the country newspapers and cashing them in.

The Country Editor's Share.

And as to cashing them in: I understand there are in existence some bulging scrap books filled with this free advertising for which our city publicity agents claim credit and upon the evidence of which they in large part base their claims to payment for their services. The detailed account of what the country newspapers got out of it is, however, another matter. It is understood that in the appropriation made by the last legislature there was covered up some $50,000 for publicity purposes connected with the "conservation" movement and to "advertise the state." I wonder to what extent this appropriation has profited the country press, which is now expected to boost this movement for an appropriation the profits of which the publicity agents of St. Paul are getting in shape to absorb.

The Nebraska Oracle.

William Jennings Bryan may not always be right. Indeed there are not wanting those who allege that the greater part of the time he is wrong. But whether right or wrong he is always interesting. Moreover, he isn't afraid to say what he thinks. And he generally manages to have quite a decided opinion on every topic of current interest. It is not surprising therefore that just now he should think the time opportune to ventilate his views on county option. He chose Chicago of all places in the world from which to talk on this subject and, although the twin city dailies haven't seen fit to quote him for reasons which perhaps may be obvious, the Chicago papers gave him top of column next to reading matter.

Personal Liberty.

I understand that we have in this state an organization known as the Liberty League which opposes county option on the ground that it is an undue interference with the liberty of the individual. On this phase of the subject Mr. Bryan has something timely to say, and whether one agrees with him or not, one cannot but be impressed with the plausible arguments he makes.

Defines the Term.

"'Personal liberty' is a phrase which is used a great deal by those who oppose legislation on the liquor question," said Mr. Bryan. "It is time that we had a definition of 'personal liberty.' We are all opposed to any unnecessary restrictions upon personal liberty, and yet we are all in favor of such restrictions as are necessary. The question is, what is necessary? The individual surrenders a certain amount of his personal libetry when he enters society. He makes this surrender in return for the advantages derived from society. For instance, if a man is living on a desert he can ride his horse as fast as he pleases. But he cannot run his horse on a public highway. He cannot gratify his love for his horse racing at the risk of the lives of others. Every city fixes a speed limit. Even the liberty of the automobilist is restricted at times, and he is compelled to reduce the speed of his machine to a point that is considered safe. And so with the restriction upon the sale and use of liquor. No individual can claim the right to use liquor in such a way as to infringe upon the equal rights of other people. I would not favor legislation forbidding the use of liquor at any time or under any circumstances. I would consider this an unnecessary restriction upon the liberty of the individual, but I am in favor of such limitation as may seem necessary for the protection of society."

The Liquor Business.

Mr. Bryan then goes on to talk of the liquor business itself on which he holds decidedly radical views. "The saloon differs from all other business in that no one regards it as a blessing," he says "it is not defended as a good thing. It is not an educational center.

"It is not an economic or moral asset to a community. It is a nuisance, and only tolerated when it is believed to be necessary. It cannot be defended at all if the community does not want it. No one would be willing to stand sponsor for the doctrine that a saloon ought to be forced into a town against the wishes of the people of the town. But the right of the people of the community to protest is so well recognized and so firmly established that I need not discuss the matter."

The Unit.

He then proceeds to argue for local option. "There is a good deal of discussion at this time," he said, "over the unit." That is, as to whether the power to regulate the liquor traffic shall be vested in the town, in the precinct, in the county, in the state, or in the nation. I hold that every unit ought to have authority to act on this subject, except as it is restrained by a larger unit. That is, that the block, the ward, the city, the precinct, the county, the state and the nation should have the undisputed right to exclude the sale of liquor within its limits or to fix such restrictions upon the sale of liquor as the people of the unit may deem necessary for their protection and welfare. I believe, also, that the larger unit has a right to control the smaller one on this, as on other subjects."

Where Bryan Falls Down.

The weak point in Mr. Bryan's argument, and it seems to me a fatal one from the Democratic point of view, is where he says that "the larger unit has the right to control the smaller one." That is certainly not good Democratic doctrine. The word "control" anyway, as applied to an independent community does not sit well on the Democratic stomach. It means the centralization of power. It is the reverse of the Jeffersonian idea that a government governs best which governs least. Even if a majority of the people of the nation assumed authority to govern New York from Washington that would make it none the less an act of tyranny to deprive the citizens of that municipality of the right to manage their own local affairs. The closer the government is to the people the more righteous it is, the freer it is, and the more Democratic it is.

Anxious Inquirers.

Republicans are just now unnecessarily exercised about who will be the Democratic candidate for governor. First they have definitely retired John Lind. Now they are busy pulling Mr. Hammond out of the race. Well, the Democratic voters haven't yet delegated their powers to the politicians of the state capitol, to the slatemakers of the metropolitan press, or to that mainspring of the Republican inspiration which has its headquarters in the German American Bank Building and even whose activities Der Reese presides with some assistance from those high up. One of these days they will say whom they want; and whether it is John Lind, Mr. Hammond or another, whatever personal sacrifice is necessary will be made. It is not the fashion of loyal Democrats to hang back when the people issue the call to service.

Orders From Headquarters.

A demand is made from the northeastern part of the state that Mr. Simth, the Eveleth banker, be nominated for state treasurer. The machine isn't in a position to close its ears to orders from that quarter. Indeed it has been quite openly intimated that if it does the county option people wouldn't hesitate to accept delegates even from St. Louis county. It has been in the air for some time that the Steel Trust politicians are not quite satisfied that their interests lie in cooperating with the politicians of the liquor interests who are dictating the Eberhart campaign and have in charge the framing of the slate.

Political Pilgrims

It was noted that during the past week quite a pilgrimage of politicians from the northern part of the state to St. Paul and their friends from other sections found it convenient to be here at the same time, among others Speaker Rockne who would like a seat in the State Senate and John Dalzell who was the floor leader in the House and who is not yet ready to abandon his political activities.

An Appeal For Help

It is understood that within the past week an urgent and pathetic appeal has been made from Washington to the local leaders to stand by the administration which is in sore straits. Privately assurance has, I learn, been sent in reply that there will be no occasion for complaint of the action of the state convention. The leaders have assured their correspondents that insurgency is on the decline in the state and that such an organization has been affected at the county seats as will result in delegates coming to St. Paul who can be relied upon to stand here they are hitched.

The comet was like the average political prediction. It didn't come up to the plans and specifications.

It is about time for Resolution Grimshaw to retire to his library and prepare for the Republican state convention.

"On to Crookston" should be the rallying cry of every person interested in the development of northern Minnesota.

Dr. Halley and Dr. Cook seem to be twigs of the same family tree. Both are short of results and convincing affidavits.

A convincing indication of the approach of an election is Jim Tawney's sudden interest in a tariff commission. Jim needs a few reasons.

It now takes two dollars to buy a hat one dollar used to buy. The Winona Independent is mean enough to suggest that the difference between this and "a fifty cent dollar" is more real than apparent.

The comet failed to carry out its advertised plan of action, and this may be accounted for, according to the Duluth Herald, on the assumptiotn that it is in some way related to the Republican party.

The Republican voters of Ohio must be a benighted lot. At the recent primary they endorsed Senator Dick for re-election. But at the general election this fall he will probably be found in the scrap heap along with Foraker, Taggart, Aldrich and Cannon.

Attorney General Wickersham talks of coming to Minnesota to make a campaign speech this fall. The Democrats will welcome his assistance, and would be glad to have him bring along Mr. Ballinger.

An Ohio woman murdered her husband because he abused her. If this spirit of independence and retaliation is permitted to continue poor man will soon be deprived of all his rights and privileges.

Uncle Joe doesn't tell us whther he intends to hang the insurgents singly, in groups or all in a bunch. We suggest the latter. It will get the job over with promptly, and besides give the common people a chonch to enjoy a Roman holiday.

"Intensive cultivation," so called, has reached its highest state of perfection in the market gardens lying about Paris, where land rent runs to $250 an acre per year, and four crops are taken from the soil between February and November, and on the Island of Guernsey, in the English Channel, where farming land is valued at $1,200 an acre—two instances that move all writers upon agricultural topics to wondering awe, and yet in the near vicinity of Boston, gardeners growing lettuce, radishes and cucumbers under glass are clearing $3,000 to $4,000 an acre a year, without attracting more than passing notice.

The Hutchinson Leader wonders if it is appreciated that the increased cost of living affects newspapers. In three years the number of newspapers in Minnesota has decreased over 100. One sixth of the newspapers in Minnesota have gone out of existance in three years because they could not make a living. During the past few years newspapers have found their payrolls increasing from fifty to one hundred per cent, while prices charged for advertising, job work and subscriptions have remained practically the same. Prices should be advanced at least one-third to yield the paper as much profit as it made ten years ago on a given amount of business. Instead of doing this the weaker papers have been permitted to die.

The following will be appreciated by those who are candidates for office and others who are not. The Little Falls Transcript says the practice of soliciting advertising on benefit programs or asking for money for church purposes from political candidates is openly condemned by two societies of a Merriam Park, St. Paul, Congregational church. One society is led by Mrs. Russell R. Dorr and the other, the Brotherhood Bible class, by J. H. Anderson. These societies denounce the practice as "graft" pure and simple though perhaps indicative not so much of "sin of the heart as an error of judgement." A part of the resolutions adopted by the societies is as follows:

"We believe that to solicit money or advertising or to attempt to sell tickets for church purposes among men who are candidates for office simply as an advertisement for the church, tends to bring discredit and adverse criticism upon the church."

This talk of uniting the Republican factions of Minnesota by declaring for a tariff commission and dodging the real issue of the tariff reform would be laughable were it not so serious. The people of Minnesota are divided in two camps—the standpatters and the reformers. Oil and water does not mix, and it does not seem possible to bring the warring factions together by unanimous dslaration that means nothing and cannot satisfy either part of the controversy. Along this line the Hibbing Ore says: "The Republican party has an elephant on its hands and any attempt to whip the Minnesota Republicans into line for Toft or his administration policies will be the disaster of the party. The idea of 'endorsing' Taft is the merest political huncombe and yellowdogism, but is the policy of the big spoilsmen who aim to retain control of the nation by yelling partyism to those who still believe that the party, like the king of old, can do no wrong. If the Minnesota Republicans endorse Tatf, the Ore hopes they will be honest enough to endorse his tariff law, and his other administration measures, and if the tariff law is condemned likewise. Political quibbling will not go with thinking voters of Minnesota, and it is a state of political thinkers."

DOCTORS DISAGREE.

W. S. Hammond is not entitled to re-election because he voted in opposition to a tariff commission.—Minneapolis Journal.

Talking of uniting standpatters and insurgents in a tariff commission compromise is the same childish drivel by which popular demand for tariff revision has been thwarted several times before. A tariff commission can be useful only to determine cost of production and show congress how to adjust duties to it. That we have already. What we want is a congress that will do the work.—Minneapolis Tribune.

THE TARIFF BUNCO.

The Minneapolis Tribune would like to support the Republican party, but it can't. It would like to defend the Payne-Aldrich tariff monstrosity, but it can't find a redeeming feature about it. If the reader wants to know why Taft, Tawney, Aldrich, Cannon and the standpatters generally are unpopular, let them read the Tribune's excoriation of the tariff dose these eminent buccaneers forced down the throats of the American people:

"The best any defender of the present bunco tariff can say for it is that it is better than the old law. The president damned it with the faint praise of the best tariff the Republican party ever made, as if it had not been the trade of the Republican party for thirty years to make the worst tariff the voters would put up with.

"Now Judge Simth, the one Iowan standpatter whose seat in congress is slipping away from him, says that defeat of the bunco tariff would have perpetuated the Dingley law. We sincerely hope that Reresentative Tawney, whose return in congress on higher grounds than the one slip he couldn't help is highly desirable, will make a more tenable position than that.

"It is not admitted that the present tariff is better than the Dingley tariff. If it is, the president has made it so by defeating the purpose of the servants of privelege with the treaty making power and the tariff commission. The question is not whether it is better or worse, but whether it carries out the pledge of the Republican platform to reduce duties to the differences between domestic and foreign cost of production.

"The best evidence that it does not is the serried array of all servants of privelege against any honest attempt to find out what this difference is. Besides the Dingley law could not have been perpetuated beyond one election. The framers of the tariff serve notice on us that we must grin and bear it for ten years more."

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Albert Lea Standard: Some farmers and consumers as well seem to think the middleman has a tendency to crowd over upon both sides.

Milaca Times: Judging by what the new Socialist mayor and council of Milwaukee are doing, Socialism could be defined as doing the things that the old political parties pramise to do but never put into practice.

Red Wing Free Press: Will the Republican state convention endorse the Taft-Payne-Aldrich bill? If it does, it will receive the condemnation of the people of Minnesota. If it does not, it will be condemned by the federal administration and its cohorts. In either case it will mean defeat for the Republican party in Minnesota. And there you are.

Warren Register: Even if a Democratic member of the Illinois legislature did get $1000 for voting for Boss Lorimer, that is no argument against the prevailing method of electing United States senators. It would be just as reasonable to say that the election of Stephenson in Wisconsin or of Clarke in Motana (his second election) is an argument against the election of senators by popular vote.

Little Falls Herald: Puzzle and conundrum experts are invited to send in samples of a tariff plank for the Minnesota state Republican convention. It must be suitalbe to Tawney, who voted one way and to Taft, who signed what Tawney voted for, and it must also suit the two senators and eight congressmen who voted the other way. One or the other side is right. Will the state convention have the courage to say which?

Wabasha Herald: If anyone wants to buy property at reasonable figures we would advise them to follow up the assessors as the assessors can get more reasonable figures on property than any other individual we know of.

Winona Independent: A voodoo doctor at Port au Prince, Hayti, has been selling oodles of "comet pills," calculated to protect his black friends from any dangers consequent upon the visitation of the comet today. A pill every hour until the comet begins to recede from our neighborhood is recommended. Now, why didn't some smart medicine man in the United States think of that.

S.S.S. CURES OLD BLOOD TROUBLES

Contagious Blood Poison is at the bottom of a great many old blood troubles. The disease may have been contracted years ago and some treatment used that removed the outward symptoms and shut the virus up in the system to slumber in the blood, but it only awaited a favorable opportunity to break out in some form again.

Certain forms of catarrhal troubles, especially where the bones are affected, scrofulous affections, non-healing sores, ulcerated membranes, etc., are due to this specific poison. Perhaps many who are afflicted in this way are ignorant of the fact that the seeds of this mighty poison are still hidden in the blood. Like the deadly serpent, which is dangerous as long as the faintest spark of life is left to enable it to sink its poisonous fangs, this powerful disease will corrupt and defile while the least particle of its insidious virus remains in the blood.

The best time to get rid of Contagious Blood Poison is when the disease is first contracted, and before its virus so penetrates the blood as to cause ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, etc. Then of course the victim is saved much humiliation and suffering; but even after the poison has become established in the system it can be removed and a cure effected if the blood be thoroughly purified with S. S. S.

S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers. It possesses penetrating powers that enable it to go down into the blood, and remove the last trace of blood poison. It cures all blood troubles simply and solely because it removes the cause from the circulation. Not only does S. S. S. cure cure Contagious Blood Poison when first contracted, but reaches it in any of its stages, even where the trouble has been inherited. S. S. S. is made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and does not contain the slightest trace of mineral in any form. You can get rid of your old blood trouble if you will take S. S. S. and allow it to purify the blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

A PERFECT CURE.

Some eight years ago I was inoculated with poison by a nurse who infected my babe with blood taint. I was covered with sores and ulcers from head to foot. No language can express my feelings of woe during these long years. I was advised by friends who had seen wonderful cures made by it, to try S.S.S. We got some and I improved from the start, and a complete and perfect cure was the result. S. S. S. is the only blood remedy which reaches desperate cases of old blood troubles.

This record will be taken every year from this time on. It includes at first the name of the child, date of birth, sex, color, etc. The record is kept on file by the government and can be referred to in years to come when certain conditions make it necessary to know the facts therein contained.

TEMPERATURE ERRORS

All metals used in watch construction expand with heat and contract with cold. The proportion, or rate, is called coefficient of expansion. When we say soft steel has a coefficient of expansion of .00000599, it means that a bar of steel will elongate that percentage of its length for each degree rise in temperature. The coefficient expansion of soft steel is .00000599; that of brass is .00001037. This is to say, brass expands about seven-tenths more than steel. There is another effect that heat produces on most metals, in fact, on every metal of which I have any knowledge except nickel-steel, viz: it renders them less rigid and more easily deflected. It is impossible for a watch to keep the same rate of time in different temperatures unless it has a cut expansion balance steel inside and brass outside with properly adjusted time screws to different temperatures.

MY FLOWER.

(Contributed.)

I had a beautiful flower,
  So fragil and sweet and fair
I loved it with a love absorbing
  And guarded with tender care.
I watched my flower expanding,
  From bud to blossom it grew;
The pride I took in its loveliness
  None but the gardner new.

I said "No harm shall befall it,
  I'll watch it by day and night;
No hand that is rude shall touch it
  Nothing its beauty shall blight.
I'll stand in the wind and the showers
  To shelter my flower rare,
It's nectar must be a dew-drop,
  Its food be the purest air.

As long as I live, my flower
  I will nurture by my side,
And the passers-by shall call it,
  "The beautiful garden's pride.'
So, I loved my flower dearly
  And thought it would never fade;
But the King of the garden saw it,
  And His stern request was made.

"Give me the beautiful flower
  Thou guardest with tender care.
The winds and the storms will crush it
  Their fury it cannot bear.
"Thy truest love cannot shield it
  As I will shield it for thee;
I'll keep it forever fadeless
  The angels' care it shall be!"

I refused—but He took my flower,
  I called—but He would not stay,
And wearing it in His bosom
  He went from my sight away.
My garden spot is deserted,
  Its pride and its fragrance hath fled,
I hear men say when they're passing,
  "The pure white flower is dead!"

But though I weep, and am lonely
  Without my beautiful flower,
I know that the King, my Saviour
  Will say in some lone, sad hour
"Come to My Heavenly garden
  And see in its perfect bloom,
Thy flower that I bore from earth land:
  Rejoice in its rare perfume."

O then I shall know His reason,
  Though I know it not to-day,
Why, in its promising beauty,
  He took my sweet flower away.

HEARING WOULDBE ONLY A FORMALITY

Governor Eberhart Disposes of Charges Against County Officials.

The Decision is Not a Surprise to Red Lake County People.

Governor Eberhart has rendered a decision in the matter of the charges of malfeasance in office brought against A. A. Latendresse, county auditor, and C. A. Landquist, chairman of the board of county commissioners. The result is what everybody who is at all informed about local conditions expected. The governor's decision is published in full as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
Executive Department.

In the matter of the charges of malfeasance in office against A. A. Latendresse, county auditor, and C. A. Landquist, chairman of the county board of Red Lake county, Minnesota.

The procedure prescribed by statute has been followed in this matter through all required steps to and including the taking and returning [illegible] of the evidence relative to the matters contained in said charges. This evidence has been read [illegible] and does not show any willful and intentional violation of law by either of the persons charged with malfeasance. I am advised that officers elected by the people should not be removed for errors of judgment, but only for willful intention to violate or ignore the law.

The ultimate facts in the case seem to me to be as follows:

1. Ditch funds were transferred to the fund for constructing county buildings contrary to law. The illegality of such action was shown the officers in question and at the next meeting of the county board the funds were transferred back to the ditch fund.

2. A site for a court house was bought with auditor's warrants. This was done upon legal advice. This erroneous advice and action resulted from giving a too broad, but not impossible, definition to the word "purchase" in the clause of the statute giving county boards power to "purchase" land for site for court house.

Under these circumstances a hearing in the matter would be a useless formality. It will not be ordered nor will any further proceedings be had herein, except for cause shown by interested parties.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Minnesota at the Capitol, in the City of St. Paul, Ramsey County, Minnesota, this 28th day of May, A. D. 1910.

ADOLPH O. EBERHART,
Governor.

LITTLE FELLOWS WIN

McIntosh and Argyle Boys Win in High School Field Meet.

At the track meet of the Red River Valley athletic association held at Crookston last Saturday honors were won by the smaller high schools represented. The athletes of the McIntosh high school scored the most points with the Argyle boys giving them a merry chase and scoring close second.

The Crookston, East Grand Forks and Red Lake Falls teams engaged in competition for the consolation prize. Red Lake Falls participated in only a part of the events because represented by only four boys and made a good showing considering the handicap.

The hot weather will soon be here. For every house-wife that means many hours of work on beastly hot days over a sizzling coal or wood fire to prepare meals. If we could tell you how to find genuine comfort in the kitchen during the summer days, you would at least consider it worth while to listen, wouldn't you? A gasoline stove will increase the joys of living. It will prepare a meal quickly and well without the uncomfortable heat of a range. Let us demonstrate this fact to you. Come into the store any day and we will show you the latest improved models of gasoline stoves.

POTATO WAREHOUSE WILL BE BUILT

Erection of Building Insures Potato Market at all Times.

D. E. Ryan, senior member of the firm of D. E. Ryan & Co., St. Paul, was in town last Thursday and took a trip through the country in the vicinity of Red Lake Falls. Mr. Ryan's company had been planning the erection of a potato warehouse in Red Lake Falls and what Mr. Ryan saw and learned of the country was so satisfactory that he made definite arrangements for the erection of the buildings.

The warehouse will be erected on the east side of the Great Northern right of way about opposite the water tank. The building will be completed in time to handle this year's crop. The erection of a warehouse in Red Lake Falls assures the top price for potatoes and a market all the time.

Moses Not Yet.

The Rev. Henry van Dyke of Princeton is quoted as telling this story at a recent Presbyterian gathering:

"A Connecticut pastor of a denomination well known to us was questioning a boy pupil of the Sunday school. The lad answered greatly to the satisfaction of the good man, but finally the latter was stumped when the youngster made his last reply.

"'What commandment, my son, did Adam break when he ate the apple?' asked the pastor.

"'Please, sir,' returned the boy, 'there were no commandments at that time.'"

PROCLAMATION ISSUED

Formal Call for Vote on Question of Dividing Red Lake County.

Governor Eberhart on Tuesday issued a proclamation calling for a vote on the question of dividing Red Lake county and creating a new county to be known as Pennington county. Thief River Falls is named as the county seat of the proposed new county and the following men are to serve as a board of county commissioners in case the prosposition to divide receives a majority of the votes cast: Peter C. Wold, Peter Heedan, Ed. A. Aubel, Daniel Shaw and Olaf Larson.

The question is to be voted upon at the next general election. The issuance of the proclamation does not mean that the governor is lending his support to the county division movement. Upon the filing of the petition with a sufficient number of signatures the governor is required to issue a proclamation of calling for a vote on the proposition.

A Stomach on a Holiday.

A Chicago wine merchant went on a yachting trip with a judge from the same city. They were out together for two weeks and had a good time. When they returned the agent was much upset to find himself summoned on a jury, but cheered up when he discovered the judge on the bench was his late yachting companion. He hurried to the court and pleaded business pressure as a reason for an excuse for him.

"What is your business?" the judge inquired of him coldly.

"I represent a wine in Chicago."

"Selling it or drinking it?"

"Well, drinking it largely."

"Step into the box, sir. A ten days' rest will do you good."

The wine agent served.

ANOTHER BANK A POSSIBILITY

Dame Rumor Says the Farmers National Bank of Red Lake Falls.

Sale of Lemieux Block Adds Interest to the New Bank Story.

The fellow who gets his information from the lamp post on the corner says that Red Lake Falls is to have another bank. The yarn spinning has progressed far enough to give the new institution a name. It is to be known as the Farmers National Bank of Red Lake Falls—that is, if the story that five St. Paul men have made application for a charter for a national bank is not without foundation.

This week a deed to the Lemieux block, now occupied by Schroiter's drug store and the Sunshine store, was filed in the office of the register of deeds. In the deed the Middle West Investment company is named as grantee—and dame rumor is again on the job. It is now said that the bank is to have the desirable location on the corner.

The Gazette is not speaking as one having authority, but the report is published for the news value it has.

Promotion for Tracy.

Fergus Falls Journal: J. L. Tracy, the Great Northern agent, is able to be out a little today, after quite a siege of rheumatic fever. The Great Northern is about to promote its agent at St. Cloud to the position of station inspector, and has offered Mr. Tray the agency in that city, but he has not yet recovered sufficiently to accept it. In case he does, the company will appoint Mr. T. J. Kelly, Jr, the present efficient cashier, to the position of agent here. The Great Northern has been very fortunate in the selection of its employes in this city, and it is the company's policy to promote men for good service all along the line.

A BIG CROWD AT CROOKSTON

Northern Minnesota Development Association Meeting This Week.

It,s the Biggest Meeting in the History of Northern Minnesota.

The big conservation meeting is on at Crookston this week. The meeting opened last evening with a smoker and there will be sessions today and tomorrow. It is a monster gathering with delegates from all over northern Minnesota and from the twin cities. There is no doubt that it is the most important meeting ever held in northern Minnesota. Among the prominent speakers is W. M. Hayes, assistant secretary of agriculture. Some of the other speakers are R. C. Dunn of Princeton, Bishop McGolric of Duluth and Bernhard Boegild of the Royal Danish Agricultural College at Copenhagen. Red Lake county is represented by a good delegation.

Senator Frye's Fishing Luck.

Senator Frye is an enthusiastic fisherman. He was once the guest of a family that arranged for him and other visitors in Eastport, Me., a picnic at a lake a few miles distant. The head of the family, noticing that his brother, who had charge of the vehicles, had placed a supply of fishing paraphernalia in one of the wagons, asked why he had done so.

"They're for Frye," was the reply.

"But, man alive, there are no fish in that lake," the elder exclaimed.

"Well, Frye doesn't know it."

Frye didn't. On arriving at the lake he took the fishing tackle and trudged off, to return some hours later very warm and very much bitten by mosquitors.

"Get any bites, Frye?" he was asked.

"Get any bites!" was the half indignant reply. "Look at my face!"

A Straight Tip.

Two Irishmen stopping at a hotel in Dublin shared the same bed as well as the same bottle of whisky. Pat waited till he saw Mike was asleep, when he rose quietly and emptied the bottle. Soon afterward Mike, waking, stole out of bed and began groping about in the dark.

"Phwat are you lookin' for, Mike?" asked Pat.

"Oh, nothin'!" said Mike.

"Well, Mike," said Pat, "go over to the corner there, and you'll find it in the bottle."

The Highest Court.

When Tom Bagnell was justice of the peace at Altmau, the highest incorporated town in the country, standing 12,000 feet above the sea level, he had occasion to fine a disorderly character $10 and costs. The victim of the operation of justice objected to the finding of the court and announced that he would take an appeal.

"What! Appeal, would you?" asked the astonished court. "You can't come any of that, now. This is the highest court in the United States, and you can't appeal."

The Prisoner Escaped.

Old colored Joe had for many years been man of all work for the Gordons. When the family moved to another town Joe remained in Reading. Several years later, when Mr. Gordon returned to Reading on business, old Joe heard he was in town and went at once to the home of Mr. Gordon's sister. They were at dinner, and at one of the open windows Joe took his stand, a pleased grin on his face. After Joe had asked about each member of Mr. Gordon's family Mr. Gordon said, "Where's Harve now, Joe?" Harve was Joe's brother.

"He's daid, suh," returned Joe. "A woman in Foht Smith shot him."

"What did they do to her?" asked Mr. Gordon.

"They put her in the penitentiary foh life. She didn't stay her time out, though," said Joe.

"She didn't? Why not?" asked Mr. Gordon.

"She daid," said Joe.—National Monthly.

THE COURT HOUSE CORNER STONE

The New County Building Will Be Formally Anchored June 11.

There Will be Appropriate Ceremonies and Everybody is Invited.

Work on the new court house is progressing very satisfactorily. The heavy concrete foundation was completed several weeks ago and the brick layers have their work several feet above ground. The building is already taking form and gives an indication of the fine appearance that the new court house will have.

The county commissioners at their meeting last Friday made provision for the proper celebration of the laying of the corner stone. The event is scheduled for Saturday, June 11. The commissioners appointed a committee of five one from each commissioner district, to prepare a brief historical sketch of Red Lake county to be deposited with other documents in the corner stone. The committee will also make other arrangements for the proper celebration of the occasion and the Gazette will tell more about that next week. The members of the committee are, F. A. Grady, Ira C. Richardson, Julius Pleth, K. O. Gigstad and John Ebert.

ALL BUT THE EIGHTH

Crookston and Red Lake Falls Played a Good Game Monday.

For seven innings the Red Lake Falls and Crookston base ball teams battled in a fine game of ball Monday afternoon with the score in favor of Red Lake Falls at that stage of the game. It looked like a sure victory for Red Lake Falls, but in the eighth inning Crookstn filled the basses and played the hit and run game for seven scores. Garceau who pitched a fine game was in no way responsible for the scoring in the eighth. The infielders were slow in handling the little ones that rolled away from the plate and did not wake up until a procession of seven Crookstonites had passed over the plate. In their half the local boys hit the ball for four scores, but it was'nt enough.

Score by innings—
Crookston 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 7 0—8
R. L. Falls 0 0 0 0 2 0 0 4 0—6

The Red Lake Falls team went to Crookston for a game yesterday afternoon. The final score tells as much as need be known about the game—Crookston 11; Red Lake Falls 1.

Spoiled the Treatment.

She was unquestionably a stout woman. She occupied more than one person's share of space in the street car and quite overshadowed her trim companion. "You really ought to try something," said her friend in reply to an aside from the stout lady herself regarding her weight. "A woman I know reduced herself twenty pounds in a very few months by taking a treatment. I can find out what it was if you like."

"You're very kind," said the stout lady, "but I've quite given up trying to get thin. Oh, I know," she went on as the other interrupted, "but you cannot induce me to take up any new fads. The last one I tried settled that. They made me imagine that I was a beautiful lily swaying in the summer breeze from side to side! I decided that was ridiculous for a woman of my weight and so"—

"Perhaps you didn't give it a fair trial," suggested her friend.

"Perhaps not, but my husband came in just when I was being a lily, and he"—

"Men never understand, do they?" said her friend.

John D. Rockefeller, always popular among the people of Tarrytown, N. Y., where he lives, is adding to that popularity this spring by his fondness for taking his friends and neighbors out driving. Not a pleasant day goes by without the oil king inviting some of them, men, women and children, to ride with him in automobile or carriage, and it is safe to say that the invitations are seldom declined, for his vehicles are the best to be had, and the drives around Tarrytown are beautiful. Mr. Rockefeller, before starting for a ride, always dons a paper vest, declaring it a great protection against colds, and he insists that his guests do the same. After the ride he refuses to take back the garments, and consequently in nearly every home in Tarrytown may be found a paper vest preserved as a souvenir of a delightful ride with the multimillionaire.

MORE LAND OPEN

233,295 ACRES PUT WITHIN REACH OF HOMESTEADERS BY TAFT'S PROCLAMATION.

IN STATE OF MINNESOTA

Filings to Be Made By Prospective Homesteaders at Crookston, Duluth and Cass Lake on June 30.

Washington, D. C. — President Taft has signed a proclamation opening 233,295 acres of Indian reservation lands in Minnesota. The large portion of this area will be subject to homestead entry at the Crookston land office at 9 a. m., June 20. Eight complete townships, embodying 185,000 acres, in ranges 32 and 35, inclusive, and in townships 157 to 159, are within the jurisdiction of the Crookston office. Also tracts on the Garden and Oak Island in the Lake of the Woods, heretofore claimed and occupied by Canadian Indians who have been removed, will be settled from the Crookston office.

In the Duluth land district parts of townships 63 and 64, range 5, on Pigeon river and Grand Portage lands will be opened on the same date. Provisions have also been made for the homesteading of 12,983 acres on the Fond du Lac reservation in townships 49, 50 and 51, in ranges 17, 18 and 19 from Duluth lands.

The balance of the land on the Winnabagoshish and the Deer creek and the White Earth lands, to the extent of 33,000 acres, will be subject to entry at Cass Lake land office on June 20.

Of the Cass Lake lands 26,000 acres are subject to immediate settlement according to the provision of the Clapp-Lindberg bill of 1908. By this is meant that those who occupy the lands within the former forest reservation near Cass lake, can, if they have occupied the land, have a preference when it comes to filing. But on the Red Lake, Chippewa, Fond du Lac and the Pigeon river lands, no preference will be given to squatters.

It is announced that while the entire area to be opened for homestead June 20, is classed as agricultural lands, that the state of Minnesota shall not be deterred from presenting any further claim for swamp lands which may lie within the reservation. About 1,450 homesteads of 160 acres each will be thrown open by the proclamation.

Tonight President Taft will extend a welcome to the delegates.

FIFTY DIE IN EXPLOSION.

Workman Drops Case of Dynamite With Fatal Results.

Havana, May 19.—Until the ruins have been more thoroughly examined it will not be known positively how many lives were lost when the rural guards barracks in the city of Pinar Del Rio was demolished by an explosion of dynamite late yesterday. There is reason, however, for the hope that the fatalities did not succeed fifty. The wounded will number more than 100, it is believed.

It is almost certain that the explosion resulted from the accidental fall of a case of dynamite from the hands of an employe of the public works department, who, with others, was loading upon wagons seventy-two cases of the explosive which was to be transferred from the barracks to the government magazine in the city. This morning twenty-eight bodies had been recovered and forty injured persons have been taken to the hospitals.

Comet Puzzles Scientists.

Williams-Bay, Wis., May 19.—Shattering all scientific calculations and completely puzzling the learned astronomers, who declare they made sure of the phenomena with repeated observations here before day break this morning, the glowing tail of Halley's comet appeared in the eastern sky today at a time when the world's comet authorities had agreed it would be in the west indicating that the earth did not pass through the diaphaneous light band last night as supposed.

Such astronomers of Prof. S. A. Mitchell of the Columbia university staff and Prof. Edwin B. Frost, head of the Yerk's observatory staff and professor Edward Barnard of the University of Chicago, witnessed the startling fan of light in the east and all agreed that it was the comet's tail.

Merry represented that he was the authorized agent of the Dickinson Commercial club and obtained $100 from Dr. Johns of Hettinger, which he stated was to be used in making a preliminary survey, and he fought the decision of the lower court on the ground that the money had been used as specified.

The court held this did not let him out. Since this case has been before the supreme court, Merry has been placed under arrest in connection with the promotion of another road, and is out under $2,000 bond, but has left the state and the authorities are looking for him now.

Merry has been in trouble many times before in connection with promotion schemes, but has always escaped arrest and prosecution.

Pullmans Begin Fight.

Chicago, May 19.—Legal warfare against the interstate commerce commission to prevent lowering of sleeping car rates as ordered by the committee, was begun here today in the filing of a bill for an injunction against the commission by General Solicitor Daniels of the Pullman company, with the clerk of the United States circuit court.

A hearing is expected next Wednesday.

The bill attacks the jurisdiction of the commission over the company and alleges that the company is not engaged in the business of furnishing transportation, merely renting its cars to the railroads as traveling hotels.

Meets Distinguished Men.

London, May 19.—Roosevelt spent the morning writing and reading. He saw no visitors.

At luncheon at Dorchester house, the former president met Lewis Harcourt, the first commissioner of public works. During his visit here he has met some forty men distinguished in the public life of Great Britain, including, with two or three exceptions, all the members of the cabinet. This afternoon Roosevelt called upon Emperor William at Buckingham palace.

Small Boy Hero at Fire.

Detroit, Mich., May 18.—Dudley Lappin, 13 years old, made a hero of himself here by rescuing his 2-year-old baby brother from their burning home after the children's mother and a neighbor had been driven back by the flames and given the child up for lost.

The little boy had the presence of mind to throw his coat over his head. With this protection he groped his way through the smoke and fire to the baby's bed presently staggering out with the little one safe in his arms. The bed clothing had protected the infant from being burned and the boy rescuer escaped with painful though not serious burns.

Taft Didn't Say It.

Washington, May 18.—President Taft today authorized several of the administration senators to deny absolutely the stories in circulation during the past few days that President Taft had recently denounced the insurgents in unmistakable terms and had used language to which these statesmen took offense. The reports reached the White House today that some of the insurgents, smarting under what they had heard had been said of them, were determined to defeat the railroad bill and others of the president's measures, regardless of what might happen to them or to the party.

Officials Probe Explosion.

Canton, O., May 18.—State officials arrived from Columbus today and began investigation into the explosion of seven boilers at the plant of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Co. yesterday afternoon resulting in the death of fourteen men and the injury to a score more.

CROWDS VIEW PARADE

First Part of Journey of Remains of Edward VII to Last Resting Place is Taken—Roosevelt Does Not Take Part.

London, May 17.—The body of King Edward VII, the peacemaker, was taken with stately pomp this morning, from Buckingham palace on the first stage of the journey to the grave and now lies in state in Westminister hall where hundreds of thousands will pay a last tribute to the dead monarch before the final passage through the streets of the capitol on Thursday.

The procession from Buckingham palace to Westminister hall passed through double lines of red coated soldiers flanked with rows of stalwart policemen and a mass of silent black garbed humanity. The buildings along the route were heavily draped with mourning.

German and other embassies in Carlton house terrace were covered with funeral palls of black and purple relieved occasionally by green wreaths and bouquets of white lilies. The first intimation that the crowd, which had been waiting for hours, had of the approach of the funeral cortege, was the booming of the first of sixty-eight minute guns which were fired at St. James park, followed by the tolling of "Big Ben," the great clock in the tower of the house of commons, which heretofore has been heard only as it struck the hours, and the roll of muffled drums.

Roosevelt, the special American ambassador to the funeral of King Edward, did not participate today in the ceremony attending the removal of the body of the king from Buckingham palace to Westminster hall. Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Roosevelt, Kermit, American Ambassador Reid and Mrs. Reid witnessed the procession from a house in Carlton house terrace, but Roosevelt spent the morning answering his accumulated correspondence.

The dominating characteristic of the procession was the impressive simplicity. There were 12,000 troops afoot and mounted and 1,000 sailors along the route, but in the procession itself, the largest body of uniformed men was massed bands of the guards. The regimant bands numbering 250 under Lieutenant Morgan, senior bandmaster of the British army, played the funeral marches.

Oppose Raise of Rates.

Chicago, May 17.—Vigorously opposing the proposed advance in freight rates which carriers in "official classification" territory and "western trunk line" territory have decided to make, shippers from all sections of the country gathered in conference here today at one of the largest meetings of shippers assembled for years.

The conference was called to order by W. H. Burn, vice president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association, under whose auspices the meeting is being held. A letter from Martin B. Madden, congressman from the First district of Illinois, explaining the provisions of a bill amending the Hepburn act, was read. A communication from Ohio C. Barber, chairman of the board of directors of the Diamond Match Co., urging united action, was also read. There were a large number of speakers.

All of the speakers declared the rates on many articles are already too high and that the carriers are wrong in their contention that higher rates are necessary to meet increased operating expenses.

Given to Committee.

Washington, May 17.—President Taft's explanation of the circumstances under which his letter, exonerating Secretary Ballinger from the Glavis charges and dismissing L. D. Glavis as prepared, was presented by Chairman Nelson to the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee when the hearings were resumed today. It will be printed as part of the record of the committee.

Lightning Hits Street Car.

Des Moines, May 17.—A street car well filled with men and girls on its way from the northern part of Des Moines downtown this morning, was hit by a bolt of lightning. John Jasper's leg was broken and J. Jackson was badly bruised in the panic which followed. The armature of the car was burned out, but the car was not otherwise damaged.

Noah is Again on Trial.

Minot, N. D., May 17.—The trial of Robert S. Noah, charged with the murder of Gus Johnson, a Kenmare homesteader and who on his first trial was sentenced to be hung, from which he was saved by the supreme court, will be tried this afternoon. It is generally understood that the case will be fought and that some interesting legal points are involved.

Forest Fire Extinguished.

Ashland, Wis., May 17.—A heavy soaking rain today is extinguishing the forest fires which have been burning here for weeks. They were the most destructive fires that ever occurred in this section.

Girl's Assailant Captured.

Winona, Minn., May 17.—Fifty miles from the scene of his alleged crime yesterday, in the village of Plainview, the authorities ran down George Rolien, 35 years old, after a sensational man hunt, in which several posses, including the constable, marshal and several residents of Plainview participated.

Rolien, it is alleged, attacked a 13-year-old girl while weeding onions in a patch in the outskirts of the village.

The girl's cries brought assistance and her assailant fled. Rolien has been employed in the village as a feather renovator for five weeks.

New North Dakota Towns.

Towner, N. D., May 18.—Three new towns will be platted in the southern part of McHenry county as a result of the running of the new Ayr to Surrey cut-off line of the Great Northern through this section. The new towns will be known as Guthrie, Karlsruhue and Sincoe. Guthrie will be located seven miles south of Granville; Karlsruhue will be located ten miles north of Balfour while Sincoe will be just five miles from Drake. New banks will be established in each of these towns by the Tallman Investment company, headed by A. Tallman of Willmar, Minn.

[illegible] oldest equestrian monument [illegible] in the New World is a [illegible] of Charles IV. of Spain, in the City of Mexico. The initial [illegible] statue in the United States [illegible] one of Gen. Andrew [illegible] which stands in the park directly in front of the White House at Washington. It is estimated that there [illegible] equestrian statues in the [illegible] of which number the city on the Potomac will have, with the completion of the Grant memorial, a total of 12, most of them representations of [illegible] heroes.

The first statue arranged for in [illegible] of a warrior identified with the Civil war was that in which Gen. Winfield Scott is depicted mounted on a charger at rest. This monument was ordered in 1857, and was erected [illegible] years later. General Scott is [illegible] uniform of lieutenant general. The material for the figures of horse [illegible] rider was derived from cannon [illegible] during the Mexican war in which General Scott won his greatest [illegible]. The pedestal for this statue is [illegible] large pieces of granite cut in Cape Ann quarries, and at the time they were obtained, the largest pieces of granite ever cut from quarries in this country.

Next came the erection of a statue to Gen. James B. McPherson. This was erected through the efforts of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, and it was intended that the monument should constitute McPherson's tomb. Beneath the statue is a vault designed to receive the body of the gallant officer killed near Atlanta, but such interment was never made. The statue represents McPherson as he led in battle. In his right hand he holds field glasses and is portrayed as gazing deliberately over a field of battle.

Surpassingly inspiring and magnificent is the statue erected to Gen. George H. Thomas by his comrades of the Army of the Cumberland in 1874. The "Rock of Chickamauga" is represented reining in his horse in order that he may obtain a better view of a field of battle. J. Q. A. Ward is the sculptor of this masterpiece, and every person who has seen it will readily agree with the art critics that there is not in the whole range of the world's sculpture so splendid a representation of a horse as the charger on which the Virginian is seated.

A fine equestrian statue of General Hancock was unveiled in 1896. Alike to the Thomas statue, the pose is one of action, the hero of Gettysburg being portrayed as a commander watchful and alert in the center of activities. The statue of General Logan, the first of the memorials to be unveiled during the present century, is unique in many respects. General Logan is represented as riding along the line of battle his sword drawn and carried low in his right hand. The horse is represented in the attitude of moving at a slow trot. On one face of the pedestal of the monument is a group representing General Logan with other leading officers of the Army of the Tennessee, while opposite is a group representing General Logan taking the oath of office as United States senator, administered by Vice-President Arthur.

All of these equestrian statues have cost considerable sums. The General Scott statue cost $20,000, and the pedestal $25,000 more. The bronze figure of McPherson cost $23,000, and the pedestal $25,000. The sum of $40,000 was paid for Ward's matchless statue of Thomas, and $25,000 for the pedestal. The statue of General Hancock involved the expenditure of $49,000 all told, and the Logan statue cost $65,000, of which sum congress appropriated $50,000. As has been said, the maximum expenditure will be made in the case of the great memorial to General Grant, upon which at least $250,000 will be expended.

Because no definite program was followed in honoring the heroes of the Civil war, it came about that some of the lesser leaders were commemorated in bronze ere the greatest Union leaders received homage in this form. However, the past few years has witnessed the beginning of compensation in this direction. The first step was the provision of a heroic equestrian statue, with an attendant group of symbolic figures of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman.

Next after the Sherman statue came the statue to McClellan, which shows "Little Mac" seated upon a splendid charger, and portrays the great organizer of the Union army wearing the service cap which became familiar to all the boys in blue who followed him. Now the nation has added to its open-air gallery of fame a statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan.

MODERN SCULPTURE FOR OUR BATTLEFIELDS

DESIGNING THE NATION'S BATTLEFIELD MEMORIALS

CARVING A BATTLEFIELD MONUMENT

CHISELING WITH A COMPRESSED AIR TOOL

THE MAKING of battlefield monuments and memorials has developed into an important industry in the United States during the past few years. This is due, first of all, to the increase in the number and size of our battlefield national parks. It is now the policy of the national government, ably seconded by most of the state governments, to convert into national parks the tracts of land in the southern and middle states which were the scenes of the great battles of the Civil war. Each year sees new reservations of this kind acquired by purchase of congress or through other means and set aside as permanent testimonials of the nation's gratitude to the men who fought and died there. Keeping pace with the creation of new parks is the policy of extension being pursued with reference to the older established battlefield parks which have not included at the outset—as few of them have—the entire areas embraced in the battle which they commemorate.

A second and even more direct influence in fostering the present activity in the creation of memorials in marble and bronze is the custom which has grown up with the development of the battlefield park plan of suitably marking every historic spot at the scene of a great struggle between the Union and Confederate forces. This explains the dozens and even hundreds of statues, monuments and markers that are now to be found in the average important battlefield park. Some of the monuments are erected by appropriation of congress or by funds set aside by the legislatures of states that desire to thus honor their sons who fought in defense of the flag. An even greater number of these enduring tributes, however, have been erected by organizations made up of the survivors of companies, troops, batteries, regiments or other minor divisions of a contesting army and who take this means of testifying to their regard for their fallen comrades.

Perhaps the best evidence of the extent to which modern sculpture is being relied upon to commemorate the deeds and the heroes of the greatest of civil wars is afforded by a tour of the Gettysburg National park. Here, lining more than 100 miles of carefully prepared roadway and marking every significant point in the three days' battle, are a total of more than 400 monuments, memorial shafts and tablets and more than 1,000 markers. Many of these testimonials in marble, granite and bronze are elaborate and costly and the aggregate cost amounts to several million dollars. And yet on this battlefield as elsewhere the labor of love is only partially completed. Numerous other monuments are definitely projected and yet others are in contemplation.

The provision of monuments in ever-increasing numbers for the battlefields (of which Gettysburg is only one) would indeed be an appalling task were it necessary to laboriously chisel out of marble by hand all the statues and carved figures. However, modern ingenuity has provided means for effective "short cuts" in battlefield sculpture—expedients that make it possible to unveil a monument within a few months after the money for it has been appropriated. Many of the present-day battlefield memorials are in bronze and in the cast of such a monument it is only necessary to model the figure in plaster. Molds are taken from this and when forwarded to the foundry enable the casting of the figure in bronze—a replica or exact duplicate of the original design which the sculptor fashioned in the clay or plaster.

The correspondingly rapid creation of granite or marble statues presented for a long time more of a problem, but it has been solved and largely by the invention of some wonderful new tools and appliances which make the long-dreamed-of "sculpture by machinery" a reality. The machines, or rather tools, which now perform in minutes what the old-time hand chiseler required hours to accomplish, are all operated by means of compressed air, utilized in much the same way that

At each one of these modern monument making institutions the air is compressed at a central power plant and is led by means of pipes and hose to the various localities where the mechanical chiseling is to be done. The designs for a statue or monument are first prepared by draftsmen and are then outlined on the stones to be cut. With these markings as a guide a workman manipulating one of the portable pneumatic tools can carve out quickly and with great accuracy the intended design. The principle of the superiority of the mechanical carver is that it rains hundreds of blows a minute, whereas the artisan with mallet and chisel would not deliver more than one or two blows. It can be appreciated that the surface to be cut is covered much more rapidly by the machine method, and moreover the air-driven chisel will cut more accurately and with greater uniformity than any save the most expert sculptor unaided.

Youth a Financial Genius

Boy Speculator Who Seems Likely to Become a Great Wall Street Magnate.

At Sweetwater he had a chance to see how luck sometimes works for a company of barnstormers. The hotel was huge, but we saw very few people about. As I recall the situation, this was a farming section, and we had to stay over night at the expense of $22. The son of the proprietor asked if we would "put up a show." We demurred. We had counted hardly a dozen noses, and thought it not worth while to unpack our trunks.

He took up to the top floor and showed us a dance hall nearly 40 feet square. "Now," he said, "I'll give you $25 and a good time to put up a show for some of my friends. What do you say?"

It was enough to cover expenses and we agreed. We hung some portieres on wires and gave vaudeville sketches and skits ad libitum to an audience of a hundred or more. The young speculator had hitched up two four-horse rigs and scoured the country for an audience. He charged three dollars a couple and returned them in his wagons. The hotel people got up a supper at 25 cents a plate and thus got their money back.

We had the time of our lives, for after our little performance we mingled with the natives and joined the merry dance. The young man lived far away from the madding crowd, but he was up to date, and made at least a hundred dollars by his little venture, and every one was satisfied.—Wide World Magazine.

True Definition of Conceit.

Conceit is vanity driven from all other shifts and forced to appeal to itself for admiration.—Hazlitt.

Onion Hard to Trace.

The onion has been so long in cultivation that its original form is not definitely known. There are so-called wild onions that grow in the woods. Nobody ever tastes them but once, and there is about the taste no suggestion that cultivation or anything else could ever make them grateful to the human palate. In all probability the onion is a native of western Asia and adjacent parts of Africa, since it is mentioned in old Egyptian writings and the Pentateuch.

Minnesota Farmer

What He Is Doing and Saying—News of the State Farm School:

The Typhoid Fly.

Prof. Washburn, chief of the entomological division of the department of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park, says the house fly, better named the typhoid fly, passing the winter as a perfect insect, or as a pupa, now appearing in alarming numbers, is laying her eggs which will quickly hatch into maggots. These reach mature growth in from six to seven days, and after resting about the same time become a perfect fly. It breeds in manure piles, in decaying vegetables, in sewage, in waste from the human intestines and in other filth. The typhoid fly does not bite, but sucks or laps up its food in a liquid state, and, crawling over bread, pastry, candy, vegetables and other articles of human food, infects it with bacteria, which, taken into the human system, causes intestinal disorders, typhoid fever, tuberculosis (consumption), &c. This filthy insect is found to be a serious menace to human health by the discovery of disease germs on its feet and body. One hundred thousand bacteria have been found under the microscope on the body of a single fly, known to have been in contact with matter voided from the human intestine. These flies, crawling over human food, infect it with deadly germs, and inoculate wounds and abrasions on the skin with loathsome disease. It may be the cause of epidemics suddenly appearing in a community for which no reason can be assigned.

The remedies are screened windows and doors, fly paper, sticky or poisoned, doing away with manure heaps, covering of slops, filth, swill barrels, and through sterilizing of intestinal discharges from patients suffering with typhoid or other fevers, or infectious diseases, before being emptied into sewer or cesspool or otherwise deposited where flies can have access to them. Prof. F. L. Washburn, University Farm, St. Paul, will send without charge bulletins treating upon the eradication of flies and other household insects to all who apply for them.

Moths In the House.

Moths are a serious menace to furs, feathers and woolen goods during May, June, July, August and September. The Entomological division of the state department of agriculture advises shaking or brushing articles of clothing on which eggs, visible with the naked eye, are found and then storing them in air tight receptacles. When carefully packed in such receptacles put a few ounces of carbon bisulphide into a saucer-shaped dish and set it on top of the goods, closing the cover tightly. Don't open for several days. In a week or ten days later a second fumigation may take place. The carbon bisulphide vapor is fatal to insect life, but as its effect on the eggs is not quite so certain two or three such fumigations during the summer are advised. The carbon bisulphide vapor is heavier than air, will penetrate everything in the box, and is not injurious to garments. It is explosive and no artificial light or matches should be used near it. It may be purchased of druggists in pint cans.

Camphor, napthaline, moth balls and cedar wood are only repellants. They do not destroy insects nor eggs. Closets, attics and other out of the way places are prolific breeding places of moths. Clothing subject to attack by moths should never be stored in them.

Green Cabbage Worms.

A farmer at St. Vincent wrote to the Extension Division for a remedy for the Green Cabbage Worm. The Entomologist of the Experiment Station suggests the following:

Paris green or arsenate of lead in water during the season as frequently as occasion demands on cabbages. Cabbages can be sprayed with any arsenical up to within a few weeks of gathering. They are not easily injured by Paris green, and some growers use it as strong as 3 pounds in 50 gallons of water. Arsenate of lead could be used the same strength with perfect safety, and it has the advantage over Paris green of sticking longer on the leaf.

A quart of soft soap, or eight quarts of strong soap-suds should be used in every 50 gallons of liquid to insure its spreading over the leaf.

Hand picking of the green worms can be resorted to, and it is worth while to pay children a little bit to kill the white butterflies hovering over the fields of cabbages and cauliflowers. The females of these butterflies lay the eggs which produce the green cabbage worm.

Experiments have shown that it is perfectly safe to use Paris green on cabbage up to within two weeks of gathering.

Hay For the Horse.

The agricultural authorities both of North Dakota and of the Minnesota Experiment station agree that a pound of hay per day per hundred pounds of weight of the horse to which it is fed is sufficient. Over feeding of hay results frequently in heaves and indigestion. It is advised to limit the amount of hay a work horse is given to avoid serious results consequent upon working on too full a stomach. Colts, however, may be fed all the hay they will eat.

Shallow and Frequent Cultivation, with a liberal application of manure, together with continued selection of early maturing ears of corn for seed, have enabled farmers in Northern Minnesota to produce from 25 to 30 bushels of Minnesota No. 23 corn per acre. This variety is known as White Cap Yellow Dent and originated at the state experiment station. To educate farmers in originating, developing and selecting their own seed grains will be the object of the Good Seed Institutes next winter to be held in various parts of the state.

Make Better Roads.

The farmer is the greatest user of the highways, and the better the roads are the larger loads he can haul to market, and the larger will be his profit. In some localities Progressive Road Leagues have been organized. Each farmer agrees to give personal attention to road work along his farm at all seasons. Farmers have not regarded this as burdensome because they do the work at odd times when other work cannot be advantageously done. The King road drag is the most useful implement for this work. Each farmer can provide himself with one for a dollar or two, and after a rain he can go over the road along his farm and improve it for travel. Directions for making a King road drag may be had without cost, by writing the Division of Agricultural Extension, University Farm, St. Paul.

Bull Thistles, Common in Pastures, cannot always be killed by mowing. Mowing tends to prevent maturity of seed. Cutting off the thistles just below the surface of the ground, two or three times a year, will effectually eradicate them. Working the ground in rotation of grass, grain and corn is a very sure way of eradication.

Manuring the Soil, the prime object of which is to increase the crop yielding capacity, may be done with stable manure, commercial fertilizer, or by plowing under green vegetation, such as clover, grasses, and weeds—before their seeds ripen. To justify the practice the increase in product from the soil must be more than enough to offset the cost of fertilizers and labor employed. Good profits almost invariably result from the application of barnyard manure and plowing under green crops.

Relation of Hay and Manure. Wheat, corn and other crops are no more improved by rotation than hay. The Minnesota Experiment Station shows that a plot continuously cut for hay the past fifteen years has given an average yield of 1.73 tons per acre, while on a plot under a three-year rotation of wheat, clover and corn, hay has yielded the past ten years an average of 2.9 tons per acre. In a five-year rotation of wheat, timothy and clover, pasture oats and corn the hay has yielded an average of 3.9 tons per acre since 1900. Eight tons of manure were applied once in five years on the five-year rotation plat. There is money in manure.

Rape For Hogs. A little rape may be sown on the out-of-the-way places on the farm for poultry and hogs. It will pay the farmer better than weeds which usually grow on such land. Rape is full of nutriment. Pasture, however, of any kind,—clover, alfalfa or any of the grasses, affords good food for pigs, and it is so much cheaper than grain foods that it is surprising that more farmers do not fence in tracts and sow the land to grazing crops for their swine. Beside furnishing cheap feed, pastures furnish the minumum amount of labor in caring for the flock. This is proven by experience at the Minnesota Experiment Station.

Rape a Quick Crop. Rape will produce pasture feed in from six weeks to two months after sowing for all stock that will eat it, and is available earlier than most green crops as feed. It may be eaten when young without injury. It also furnishes pasture until late in the summer if sown six to eight weeks before wanted. Experience at the Experiment Station, St. Anthony Park, has demonstrated these facts.

The Minnesota Experiment station does not advocate the spending of money for an incubator unless one is prepared to devote enough time and study to the hatching of eggs to make it a profitable investment. If an incubator is used it should be placed in a room specially prepared for it, where it can be the least disturbed by the changing temperature.

Late Summer Pasture. Nothing in the opinion of the Minnesota Experiment station produces a more satisfactory growth of swine, as a late pasture food in Minnesota, than peas sown at the rate of two or three bushels per acre. When the peas are perfectly ripe the field may be turned over to the pigs. They "will do the rest."

The Minnesota Experiment station has found through a brief experimentation that pullets hatched in April and May will develop into best winter layers. It is easier to get strong, fertile eggs during those months than later in the summer.

The Experiment station at University Farm has never been able to discover a way of telling, before placing in an incubator or under a hen, whether an egg will hatch or if it will produce a rooster or pullet.

In setting hens, or in incubating artificially, the Minnesota Experiment station has found best results by selecting eggs of a uniform size, with smooth shell and as perfectly formed as possible.

Harrowing Corn after it is planted is looked upon at the Experiment station as somewhat hazardous because the harrow is sure to injure some of the hills. After the farmer has planted his corn he cannot afford to lose any portion of his field through unwise cultivation. Planting corn more thickly will not compensate for the loss as the harrow does not strike all hills alike, and is too liable to leave too many stalks in one hill and too few in another. Harrowing before planting is the better practice. Cultivate afterward.

There is no worse reason for running a man for office than the fact that he needs it.

Now if the president could only find African missions for Ballinger and Wickersham.

Secretary Ballinger is said to be in favor of universal peace and the disarmament of the newspapers.

Joe Cannon is getting a lot of inexpensive fun. He's continually taking a joy ride on a hot air wagon.

Congressman Tawney has discovered that Southern hospitality and chivalry are not appropriate topics for criticism.

It is likely that Minnesota will have another congressman after the reapportionment. It is hoped that northern Minnesota will have a few more members of the legislature, too.

Minnesota has a lieutenant governor again in the person of Senator Ed. Smith. Although there is a question with regard to his eligibility, there is not likely to be occasion to raise the question.

Cass Lake Times: President Taft's insistence in demanding a tariff commission with a view to a revision "if necessary"—is to put it mildly—a slam at his insistence that the present tariff bill is the best ever passed.

The Stillwater Gazette declares that Democratic papers are charging the failure of Haley's comet to the Republican party. Perhaps the Gazette is right. We wouldn't wonder if the comet's tears of pity have taken all the shine off.

The John S. Kennedy Inheritance tax case has been settled by Attorney General George T. Simpson, acting for the state, for $315,325.25. Kennedy was a New York millionaire and heavy stock holder in the Great Northern Railway company.

Frank A. Day underwent an operation at the Cobb hospital at St. Paul last week. It was eminently successful and in a few days Frank expects to be "whooping 'er up" again. It takes something more than a surgical operation to daunt Frank's opitmistic spirit.

President Taft has at last concluded that he needs a new secretary—even the Minnesota brand being unequal to the emergency. Mr. Carpenter had little training for the responsible duties of a private secretary of the president, and it is small wonder that he made a failure of the job.

The Breckenridge Telegram is strongly opposed to the churches opening their doors to the meetings of the Anti-Saloon League, arguing that it opens the way for active participation in politics by the church organizations. We are disposed to disagree with the Telegram. The church people are sponsors for the moral sentiment of the community, and they can perform a greater good by discussing present-day needs than by quibbling over the academic propositions of predestination or the mistakes of Moses. The great need of the day is a church militant unafraid to denounce what it conceives to be wrong. This is not bringing the church into politics. It is making it a power for righteousness.

THE PEOPLE WANT LIND.

Unless John Lind is a wizard it will be impossible for him to put aside the nomination for governor. The demand comes from every corner of the state and all places between. It looks now as though Lind would be nominated in spite of anything he can say or do to avoid it. And John Lind isn't the man to shirk a fight or refuse the unanimous call of his party. The Duluth Herald in a lengthy editorial, has this to say:

"In each one of the eighty-five counties of Minnesota the demand is that John Lind shall be nominated. The unanimity of that demand is a rare compliment. It is one that comes to few men in any state. It is a high tribute to the ability and citizenship of the man it honors. It is a testimonial that neither he nor the leaders of the party can afford to ignore.

"In the face of such a demand as this, Mr. Lind's personal inclinations must give way to duty. That he does not care to be elected does not abate the ardor of those who wish him to be elected governor. It may even be that it increases that ardor, for the people often tire of those who constantly importune them for office, and prefer to fill their high places with men whose calibre is such that they need not seek office for livelihood, notority or temporary eminence.

"There is no doubt about the demand. It is for John Lnid. The people want him to be the Democratic candidate and if he becomes the Democratic candidate they will make him the governor, putting him back in the place he filled with great credit to himself and to the state ten years ago.

"There are other men in the Democratic party who would make good candidates. There are other Democrats who would make good governors. There are other men who could be elected on the Democratic ticket. But neither these facts nor the fact that John Lind prefers to evade rather than seek the office have any influence with the people. They want Mr. Lind and they demand his nomination.

"In such circumstances it is the plain duty of the Democratic party to nominate Mr. Lind for governor. In such circumstances, it is the plain duty of Mr. Lind to accept the nomination. The state needs him, the people demand him."

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is a species of blood poverty known as anaemia. It is a condition in which the circulation is so weak and impure that it is unable to supply the system with sufficient nourishment and strength to preserve ordinary health.

The medical profession is divided in opinion as to the manner in which malarial poison gets into the blood. Some take the position that it is an atmospheric poison, the specific germs of which are breathed into the lungs and thus transmitted to the circulation. Others advance the opinion that persons become inoculated with the poison through the bites of mosquitos. All however agree that MALARIA is a blood affection, and any treatment to successfully overcome it must not only purify this vital fluid, but at the same time add the necessary qualities of richness and strength to the circulation.

The malarial poison destroys large numbers of the rich, red corpuscles of the circulation, and the peculiar paleness of anaemic persons is due to this fact. In the first stages of Malaria there is a bilious condition of the system, constant bodily weakness, poor appetite, and a "no account," tired feeling.

S. S. S. searches out and destroys every particle of malarial infection and builds the blood up to a healthy, nourishing condition. Then the system receives its required nutriment, the bright red corpuscles begin to multiply in the circulation, sallow complexions grow ruddy and flushed with health, the liver and digestion are righted, the appetite improved, and the system vitalized and refreshed in every way. S.S.S. is a safe and pleasant remedy as well as an efficient one. If you have Malaria we will be glad to have you write us describing the case. We will send free our book on the blood and at the same time our physicians will give you some medical advice that will be of great service to you in curing yourself with S. S. S. No charge for the book or advice.

A PHYSICAL WRECK.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi River, and became so impregnated with malaria that for a year afterwards I was a physical wreck. I took a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures and malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S.S.S., which I did about a year ago. The result was that after taking several bottles of the large size I was as well and strong as I ever was, and have never had a chill since. I expect to take S.S.S. every year as a preventive, and would advise everybody else to follow my example.

Overreached Himself.

A doctor living in a country town near London was notoriously fond of good living. He had accepted an invitation to dine with friends, but as he climbed their steps he smelled venison cooking in the kitchen next door.

The neighbors being also his friends, he resolved to drop in on them unexpectedly to partake of the venison. They pressed him to share their informal dinner, but when he refused both soup and fish his host began to apologize for the simple fare.

The doctor then confessed that he was waiting for the venison, which he had smelled as he came in.

"Oh, that venison," said his entertainer, "we were roasting to oblige our neighbors, who have a dinner party next door."

Duty.

Duty is a power which rises with us in the morning and goes to rest with us at night. It is coextensive with the action of our intelligence. It is the shadow which cleaves to us, go where we will, and which only leaves us when we leave the light of life.

HIS ASSISTANT

A Story of a Professor And a Girl Graduate

By BERTHA D. ALSOP

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Professor Erskine was a very old young man. He was thirty-two and looked ten or fifteen years older. "What can you expect," said one of the young women students, referring to his antique appearance, "of a man whose sole diet is Greek roots?"

Luella Greenfield led her class from start to finish and took every prize she competed for. She was a great favorite with Professor Erskine, who the day after her graduation said to her:

"Your career must not be that of women who are tied down to the care of children. Choose rather to devote yourself to intellectual pursuits. I can give you a fine opportunity for a beginning. I am writing a history of the barbarian kings who changed the influence of Rome in European civilization during the fourth and fifth centuries. I need an assistant to aid me in my researches. Will you join me?"

"And give up all thoughts of a home life with dear little children to comfort me when I am old?"

"You will be interested in your work, a far nobler duty than mending children's clothes and washing their dirty faces."

Luella, whether or no she was convinced, was at last induced to accept the professor's invitation. She dived into books on the Goths, while the professor bored into the past of the Huns. He found her extremely useful. Indeed, he soon learned that it would have been next to impossible to get on without her. She worked so hard that at the end of a few months she needed a rest and went away from him. Professor Erskine was not surprised that he found his work very difficult without her, but he was surprised that during her absence he had no heart in his work. Genseric, Alaric, Attila, all the barbarian kings, ceased suddenly to interest him. The libraries in which he delved had become musty. In his study there were Luella's chair and desk, but without Luella the room was unbearable. Instead of working he went out and walked back and forth on the campus.

"There's old Erskine," said a co-ed on her way to lecture, "stalking back and forth as if moonstruck. He's been doing that ever since Luella Greenfield went away. I wonder if he's dreaming of the barbarian kings or of her."

"He persuaded her," said another, "to devote her life to wormy books. He certainly wouldn't permit himself to think about her except as a means to dig up the past of the people he writes about."

One day a letter came to the professor from his assistant stating that he must get some one to take her place. In order to fit herself physically for the plans he had laid down for her to an intellectual field she needed a year of out of door life.

The professor's heart fell like a barometer before a sudden storm. The Goths, the Visigoths, the Huns, were forgotten in the depth of his despair at being condemned to work without Luella. As to having any one else sitting at her desk, the thought was unbearable.

The next morning the college bulletin announced that Professor Erskine, having been suddenly called away, would not lecture that day. A male student, reading the notice, remarked: "Good! I can practice pitching all day. I'll bet he's got on to a headless Jupiter and gone to buy it for the museum." A girl student followed and, with her sex's keener intuition, said: "H'm! Gone after Luella Greenfield. I knew she'd get him."

"I have come," said the professor to his assistant, "to learn if it is absolutely essential that you should give up your work for so long a period."

"So my physician advises me—that is, if I am to do sedentary work. And you know how interested I am in following an intellectual life. It was you who directed me."

"H'm! Unfortunate—very unfortunate for me. It will be impossible for me to continue my present work without your assistance."

"There's Miss Pringle who was graduated last June. She's very bright. She would love the work."

"I shall give it up."

"Oh, professor, don't talk that way. It will give you a great reputation."

"I can't go on with it."

"Not with an able assistant?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Unless I see you at your accustomed place I have no heart in it, and literary work done without heart is worthless."

Luella turned away, but said nothing.

"Perhaps," the profesor went on, reddening, "if I knew when I went home at night that you would—be there—I mean as my wife—it might make a difference."

There was a prolonged silence, at the end of which Luella said:

"That would mean an abandonment of an intellectual career for me."

The professor hung his head like a boy who had been caught robbing the sugar bowl.

"You remember what you said to me a few months ago as to the preference for an intellectual life?"

He remembered very well that it was better than "mending children's clothes and washing their dirty faces," but still he said nothing.

Suddenly she threw her arms about his neck.

THE HORSY MAN.

He Was Pressed Into Service as an Art Critic.

A London horse dealer famous for his expert treatment of "whistling," "roaring," "bucking" and other equine ailments had a friend who was a picture buyer. The latter, hearing that one of James MacNeill Whistler's works had been put on sale, was hurrying to New Bond street to have a look at it.

Meeting the horsy man on his way, he stated that he was going to have a look at a Whistler and inquired jocularly if his friend knew anything about Whistlers.

"If I know anything in the world it is what constitutes a genuine whistler," replied the man, greatly to the astonishment of the first, who had never heard of such an infirmity of the horse.

"Come along, then," said he, "and I'll get your opinion on one that's in this neighborhood."

Well, they entered New Bond street, and when they came opposite the print seller's where the picture was hanging the leader of the quest said:

"Here we are. It's inside."

"What's inside?" asked the other.

"The Whistler," said the first.

"It's the queerest place for a stable I ever knew," remarked the horsy man. "Where's the whistler here?"

"It's upstairs," said his friend, entering.

"How the mischief did they get it upstairs?" inquired the other.

"I suppose they carried it up. You didn't fancy it could walk, did you?"

"Is it so far gone as that? It must be a roarer," said the horsy man as they went up to the first floor.

"I don't know any modern painter named Roarer," said the other. "But there's the Whistler, and you may give me your opinion on it. He calls it 'Sauterne In A Flat.'"

The horsy man turned without a word, strode out of the shop, and the two have never spoken since.

A Clincher.

An Irishman visited a tuberculosis exhibit, where lungs in both healthy and diseased conditions were displayed preserved in glass jars. After carefully studying one marked "Cured tuberculosis lung" he turned to the physician and said:

"Perhaps it's because Oi'm Irish, but if he cured th' patient how th' divil could ye have his lung in a bottle?"—Lippincott's.

The Accommodating Night Clerk.

Up to the night clerk's desk went Abe Perlmutter, a Chicago travelling man. "I wonder," he says, "could you find me somebody to play a game of pinochle for an hour or two tonight?"

"Why," says the clerk, "I guess so." And he runs his eye over the register. "Boy," he calls, "page Mr. Gutwillig."

A GAME IS ARRANGED.

Before long Mr. Gutwillig is found and introduced to the pinochle hungry Perlmutter, and a game is arranged. "How did you know I played pinochle?" Mr. Gutwillig asks the clerk. "Oh, I"— begins the clerk. Just then emerges from the bar a young man triple plied with wine. He staggers up to the desk and says: "Shay, I wanna fight! D'ye hear? I'm lookin' f'r a scrap!"

Thus the clerk: "Boy, page Mr. Kelly and Mr. O'Brien."—Success Magazine.

BABY WASTED TO SKELETON

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk.

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment.

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

A Divided Family.

The bright six-year-old daughter of a physician hopped into his reception room the other day and a waiting woman patient engaged her in conversation.

"I suppose you go to church and Sunday school?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, ma'am," she replied.

"And what denomination do your parents belong to?"

"Why," said the little one, "mamma's a Presbyterian and papa's a stomach specialist."

CHAPTER I.

I Take a Country House.

This is the story of how a middle-aged spinster lost her mind, deserted her domestic gods in the city, took a furnished house for the summer out of town, and found herself involved in one of those mysterious crimes that keep our newspapers and detective agencies happy and prosperous. For 20 years I had been perfectly comfortable; for 20 years I had had the window-boxes filled in the spring, the carpets lifted, the awnings put up and the furniture covered with brown linen; for as many summers I had said good-by to my friends, and, after watching their perspiring hegira, had settled down to a delicious quiet in town, where the mail comes three times a day, and the water supply does not depend on a tank on the roof.

And then—the madness seized me. When I look back over the months I spent in Sunnyside, I wonder that I survived at all. As it is, I show the wear and tear of my harrowing experiences. I have turned very gray—Liddy reminded me of it only yesterday by saying that a little bluing in the rinse water would make my hair silvery instead of a yellow white. I hate to be reminded of unpleasant things and I snapped her off.

"No," I said sharply, "I'm not going to use bluing at my time of life, or starch, either."

Liddy's nerves are gone, she says, since that awful summer, but she has enough left, goodness knows! And when she begins to go around with a lump in her throat, all I have to do is to threaten to return to Sunnyside, and she is frightened into a semblance of cheerfulness—from which you may judge that the summer there was anything but a success.

The newspaper accounts have been so garbled and incomplete—one of them mentioned me but once, and then only as the tenant at the time the thing happened—that I feel it my duty to tell what I know. Mr. Jamieson, the detective, said himself he could never have done without me, although he gave me little enough credit, in print.

I shall have to go back several years—13, to be exact—to start my story. At that time my brother died, leaving me his two children. Halsey was 11 then and Gertrude was seven. When Halsey had finished his electrical course and Gertrude her boarding school both came home to stay. The winter Gertrude came out was nothing but a succession of sitting up late at night to bring her home from things, taking her to the dressmakers between naps the next day, and discouraging ineligible youths with either more money than brains or more brains than money. By spring I was quite tractable. So when Halsey suggested camping in the Adirondacks and Gertrude wanted Bar Harbor, we compromised on a good country house with links near, within motor distance of town and telephone distance of the doctor. That was how we went to Sunnyside.

We went out to inspect the property, and it seemed to deserve its name. Its cheerful appearance gave no indication whatever of anything out of the ordinary. Only one thing seemed unusual to me: The housekeeper, who had been left in charge, had moved from the house to the gardener's lodge a few days before. As the lodge was far enough away from the house, it seemed to me that either fire or thieves could complete their work of destruction undisturbed. The property was an extensive one; the house on the top of a hill, which sloped away in great stretches of green lawn and clipped hedges, to the road, and across the valley, perhaps a couple of miles away, was the Greenwood Club house. Gertrude and Halsey were infatuated.

The property was owned by Paul Armstrong, the president of the Traders' bank, who at the time we took the house was in the west with his wife and daughter, and a Dr. Walker, the Armstrong family physician. Halsey knew Louise Armstrong—had been rather attentive to her the winter before, but as Halsey was always attentive to somebody, I had not thought of it seriously, although she was a charming girl. I knew of Mr. Armstrong only through his connection with the bank, where the children's money was largely invested, and through an ugly story about the son, Arnold Armstrong, who was reported to have forged his father's name for a considerable amount to some bank paper. However, the story had had no interest for me.

I cleared Halsey and Gertrude away to a house party, and moved out to Sunnyside the first of May.

The first night passed quietly enough. I have always been grateful for that one night's peace; it shows what the country might be under favorable circumstances. Never after that night did I put my head on my pillow with any assurance how long it would be there; or on my shoulders, for that matter.

On the following morning Liddy and Mrs. Ralston, my own housekeeper, had a difference of opinion, and Mrs. Ralston left on the 11 train. Just after luncheon, Burke, the butler, was taken unexpectedly with a pain in his right side, much worse when I was within hearing distance, and by afternoon he was started cityward. That night the cook's sister had a baby—the cook, seeing indecision in my face, made it twins on second thought—and, to be short, by noon the next day the household staff was down to Liddy and myself. And this in a house with 22 rooms and five baths!

Liddy wanted to go back to the city at once, but the milkboy said that Thomas Johnson, the Armstrongs' colored butler, was working as a waiter at the Greenwood club and might come back. I have the usual scruples about coercing people's servants away, but few of us have any conscience regarding institutions or corporations—witness the way we beat railroads and street car companies when we can—so I called up the club, and about eight o'clock Thomas Johnson came to see me. Poor Thomas!

Well, it ended by my engaging Thomas on the spot, at outrageous wages, and with permission to sleep in the gardener's lodge, empty since the house was rented. The old man—he was white-haired and a little stooped, but with an immense idea of his personal dignity—gave me his reasons hesitatingly.

"I ain't sayin' nothing', Mis' Innes," he said, his hand on the door-knob, "but there's been goin's-on here this las' few months as ain't natchal. 'Tain't one thing an' 'taint another—it's jest a door squealin' here, an' a winder closing' there, but when doors an' winders gets to cuttin' up capers and there's nobody nigh 'em, it's time Thomas Johnson sleeps somewhar's else."

Liddy, who seemed to be never more than ten feet away from me that night, and was afraid of her shadow in that great barn of a place, screamed a little, and turned a yellow-green. But I am not easily alarmed.

It was entirely in vain I represented to Thomas that we were alone, and that he would have to stay in the house that night. He was politely firm, but he would come over early the next morning, and if I gave him a key, he would come in time to get some sort of breakfast. I stood on the huge veranda and watched him shuffle along down the shadowy drive with mingled feelings—irritation at his cowardice and thankfulness at getting him at all. I am not ashamed to say that I double-locked the hall door when I went in.

"You can lock up the rest of the house and go to bed, Liddy," I said severely. "You give me the creeps standing there. A woman of your age ought to have better sense." It usually braces Liddy to mention her age; she owns to 40—which is absurd. Her mother cooked for my grandfather, and Liddy must be at least as old as I. But that night she refused to brace.

"You're not going to ask me to lock up, Miss Rachel!" she quavered. "Why, there's a dozen French windows in the drawing room and the billiard room wing, and every one opens on a porch. And Mary Anne said that last night there was a man standing by the stable when she locked the kitchen door."

"Mary Anne was a fool," I said sternly. "If there had been a man there she would have had him in the kitchen and been feeding him what was left from dinner, inside of an hour, from force of habit. Now don't be ridiculous. Lock up the house and go to bed. I am going to read."

But Liddy set her lips tight and stood still.

"I'm not going to bed," she said. "I am going to pack up, and to-morrow I am going to leave."

"You'll do nothing of the sort," I snapped. Liddy and I often desire to part company, but never at the same time. "If you are afraid, I will go with you, but for goodness' sake don't try to hide behind me."

The house was a typical summer residence on an extensive scale. Wherever possible, on the first floor, the architect had done away with partitions, using arches and columns instead. The effect was cool and spacious, but scarcely cozy. As Liddy and I went from one window to another, our voices echoed back at us uncomfortably. There was plenty of light—the electric plant down in the village supplied us—but there were long vistas of polished floor, and mirrors which reflected us from unexpected corners, until I felt some of Liddy's foolishness communicate itself to me.

The house was very long, a rectangle in general form, with the main entrance in the center of the long side. The brick-paved entry opened into a short hall, to the right of which, separated only by a row of pillars, was a huge living room. Beyond that was the drawing room, and in the end the billiard room. Off the billiard room, in the extreme right wing, was a den, or cardroom, with a small hall opening on the east veranda, and from there went up a narrow circular staircase.

Liddy and I got as far as the card-room and turned on all the lights. I tried the small entry door there, which opened on the veranda, and examined the windows. Everything was secure, and Liddy, a little less nervous now, had just pointed out to me the disgraceful dusty condition of the hard-wood floor, when suddenly the lights went out. We waited a moment; I think Liddy was stunned with fright or she would have screamed. And then I clutched her by the arm and pointed to one of the windows opening on the porch. The sudden change threw the window into relief, an oblong of grayish light, and showed us a figure standing close, peering in.

That Completed Our Demoralization.

As I looked it darted across the veranda and out of sight in the darkness.

CHAPTER II.

A Link Cuff-Button.

Liddy's knees seemed to give away under her. Without a sound she sank down, leaving me staring at the window in petrified amazement. Liddy began to moan under her breath, and in my excitement I reached down and shook her.

"Stop it," I whispered. "It's only a woman—maybe a maid of the Armstrongs'. Get up and help me find the door." She groaned again. "Very well," I said, "then I'll have to leave you here. I'm going."

She moved at that, and, holding to my sleeve, we felt our way, with numerous collisions, to the billiard-room, and from there to the drawing-room. The lights came on then, and, with the long French windows unshuttered, I had a creepy feeling that each one sheltered a peering face. In fact, in the light of what happened afterward, I am pretty certain we were under surveillance during the entire ghostly evening. We hurried over the rest of the locking-up and got upstairs as quickly as we could. I left the lights all on, and our footsteps echoed cavernously. Liddy had a stiff neck the next morning, from looking back over her shoulder, and she refused to go to bed.

"Let me stay in your dressing room, Miss Rachel," she begged. "If you don't I'll sit in the hall outside the door. I'm not going to be murdered with my eyes shut."

It was 11 o'clock when I finally prepared for bed. In spite of my assumption of indifference, I locked the door into the hall, and finding the transom did not catch, I put a chair cautiously before the door—it was not necessary to rouse Liddy—and climbing up put on the ledge of the transom a small dressing-mirror, so that any movement of the frame would send it crashing down. Then, secure in my precautions I went to bed.

I did not go to sleep at once. Liddy disturbed me just as I was growing drowsy, by coming in and peering under the bed. She was afraid to speak, however, because of her previous snubbing, and went back, stopping in the doorway to sigh dismally.

Somewhere down-stairs a clock with a chime sang away the hours—eleven-thirty, forty-five, twelve. And then the lights went out to stay. The Casanova Electric Company shuts up shop and goes home to bed at midnight: when one has a party, I believe it is customary to fee the company, which will drink hot coffee and keep awake a couple of hours longer. But the lights were gone for good that night. Liddy had gone to sleep, as I knew she would. She was a very unreliable person: always awake and ready to talk when she wasn't wanted and dozing off to sleep when she was. I called her once or twice, the only result being an explosive snore that threatened her very windpipe—then I got up and lighted a bedroom candle.

My bedroom and dressing room were above the big living room on the first floor. On the second floor a long corridor ran the length of the house, with rooms opening from both sides. In the wings were small corridors crossing the main one—the plan was simplicity itself. And just as I got back into bed, I heard a sound from the east wing, apparently, that made me stop, frozen, with one bedroom slipper half off, and listen. It was a rattling, metallic sound, and it reverberated along the empty halls like the crash of doom. It was for all the world as if something heavy, perhaps a piece of steel, had rolled clattering and jangling down the hard-wood stairs leading to the card-room.

In the silence that followed Liddy stirred and snored again. I was exasperated; first she kept me awake by silly alarms, then when she was needed she slept like Joe Jefferson, or Rip—they are always the same to me. I went in and aroused her, and I give her credit for being wide awake the minute I spoke.

"Get up," I said, "if you don't want to be murdered in your bed."

"Where? How?" she yelled vociferously, and jumped up.

"There's somebody in the house," I said. "Get up. We'll have to go to the telephone."

"Not out in the hall!" she gasped; "Oh, Miss Rachel, not out in the hall!" trying to hold me back. But I am a large woman and Liddy is small. We got to the door, somehow, and Liddy held a brass andiron, which it was all she could do to lift, let alone brain anybody with. I listened, and, hearing nothing, opened the door a little and peered into the hall. It was a black void, full of terrible suggestion, and my candle only emphasized the gloom. Liddy squealed and drew me back again, and as the door slammed, the mirror I had put on the transom came down and hit her on the head. That completed our demoralization. It was some time before I could persuade her she had not been attacked from behind by a burglar, and when she found the mirror smashed on the floor she wasn't much better.

A Famous Picture Matched

Companion Piece of a Painting in the Frankfort Museum is in America.

One of the most widely-known collectors of old masters in this country recently has acquired from the Ehrich galleries two canvases for his collection. These are "Portraits of Frau Urmiller and Daughter," by a Suabian master of about 1525, and a "Portrait of a Venetian Lady," by Bernadino Licinio (about 1540).

Especially interesting in connection with the example of early South German portraiture is the fact that it is the companion piece to a painting in the Frankfort museum, representing Herr Urmiller and son. Until four or five years ago the Frankfort work was always attributed to and admired as a Holbein. The latest criticism, however, has attributed the painting to some unknown but extraordinary master who painted in the neighborhood of Augsburg in the first half of the sixteenth century.

Licinio, whose work consists principally of portraits and family groups, worked during the greater part of his life in Venice and indicates the influence of Titian. Examples of his pictures are found in the principal galleries of Europe. The delicacy of outline, richness of color and purity of condition make the picture recently acquired from the Ehrich galleries a notable example of Licinio's work.

Shows Value of Steel Car.

That the steel car is of great value as a protection to passengers in the event of collision was demonstrated in a recent clash of two trains in the Hudson tunnel, New York city. There was no such telescoping as would probably have occurred with wooden cars, and the injuries were merely such as resulted from the passengers' being thrown down by the shock of the collision.

The Overland
The Simplest Car

The wonderful sale of the Overland—greater than any other car ever known—is largely due to simplicity. The man who runs his own car wants a trouble-proof car.

We are turning out 140 such cars every day, but we never yet have been able to make as many as people wanted.

Easy to Operate

The Overlands operate by pedal control. One goes backward or forward, fast or slow, by simply pushing pedals. It is as simple as walking, and the hands are left free to steer.

The Overland has fewer parts than any other automobile. One part is made to take the place of many. It is free from complexities. The operations are all automatic.

A novice could run an Overland from coast to coast the first time he tried. One of these cars has run 7,000 miles without stopping the engine.

Very Low Prices

The Overlands are made—as watches are made—by modern automatic machinery. And we devote a whole factory to one model alone.

Because of these facts, and our enormous output, we give more for the money than anyone else. We have cut the cost 20 per cent in the past year alone.

We now sell a 25-horsepower Overland for $1,000 in roadster style, or for $1,100 with tonneau. The car has a 102-inch wheel base, and is easily capable of 50 miles an hour.

We sell a 40-horsepower Overland for $1,250. Other Overland models cost $1,300, $1,400 and $1,500. All prices include gas lamps and magneto.

You will find no car that compares with an Overland at anywhere near its price.

The Car You'll Want

You will see why the Overlands outsell all other cars when you make your comparisons. Wherever you are you can do this, for there are Overland dealers everywhere.

But the first step is to send for our catalog—to see all the styles and know all the facts. When we send it we will tell you our nearest dealer. Please send us this coupon now.

Really a Serious Dilemma.

"The chap who works on one side of me," said an office man, "has been married six weeks and he sneaks to the telephone about four times a day and calls up his wife, and then I hear him saying: 'Dear, how is your headache now? I hope you are feeling better.' Then pretty soon he comes back to his desk and goes to work again all smiling.

"The man who works on the other side of me has been married six years and he goes to the telephone only when he's called and then I hear him saying: 'Why, I can't possibly do that, I can't spare the money;' and then he comes back to his desk all scowling.

"And, really, when I hear the way these two men go on I don't know what to do. I don't know whether to get married or to stay a bachelor."

Too Lavish.

Mrs. Dobbs was trying to find out the likes and dislikes of her new boarder, and all she learned increased her satisfaction.

"Do you want pie for breakfast?" she asked.

"No, I thank you," said the new boarder, with a smile. "Pie for breakfast seems a little too much."

"That's just the way I look at it," said Mrs. Dobbs, heartily. "I say pie for dinner is a necessity, and pie for supper gives a kind o' finishing touch to the day; but pie for breakfast is what I call putting on airs."—Youth's Companion.

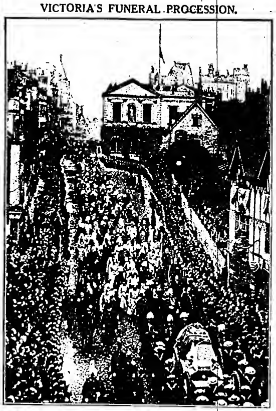
VICTORIA'S FUNERAL PROCESSION.



From photograph, copyright, by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

KINGS AND PRINCES OF ALL NATIONS FOLLOWED THE BIER OF QUEEN VICTORIA. A SIMILAR SCENE WAS WITNESSED AT THE FUNERAL OF KING EDWARD.

FUNERAL RITES OF KING EDWARD VII.

London, Eng.—The funeral of King Edward is declared to have been the most imposing ceremonial Great Britain's capital ever witnessed. Thirty thousand soldiers were brought from Aldershot and other military camps to line the streets when the procession passed.

As there was no room to barrack them over night, the soldiers bivouacked in the parks and streets. The city had the appearance of an invested town for two days. Some of the soldiers slept in tents in the parks, while the remainder lay down beside their guns in the streets.

At a conservative estimate 700,000 persons passed through Westminster hall to look upon the coffin of the king lying in state. Barriers were built, by means of which the people were ushered through in four lines at the rate of 18,000 an hour. The body of the late king was not exposed to view.

Queen Mother Chose Hymns.

The hymns sung at the service at Windsor were all of the queen mother's choice. They were "My God, My Father, While I Stray," "Now the Laborer's Task Is O'er," and "I Heard a Voice From Heaven."

Scotland yard had all its detectives on duty, and these were reinforced by a hundred more from continental cities. All visitors were watched, but there was little real fear of anarchistic attempts, because it was known that every one under surveillance would be deported from England if any trouble were caused on this occasion, and it was not likely that the persons of the anarchist type would give up voluntarily their safest refuge in Europe.

The procession to Westminster hall May 17 for the lying in state was almost on as great a scale as the funeral procession. The cortege included King George and all the foreign sovereigns on horseback, and the queen mother and the royal ladies in carriages.

When the funeral procession started every street car in London came to a standstill for a quarter of an hour. All the public houses in London were closed while the procession was passing.

No Distinction Shown.

There was no distinction as to person nor were there any ticket privileges for the lying in state in Westminster hall. All had to take their turn in line.

At St. George's chapel, at Windsor, from whence the body was carried to its final resting place the carved stalls were removed in order to give place to timber seating. Otherwise not a tenth of those entitled to attend would have been able to enter. The chapel was draped with violet hangings.

The service held in Westminster abbey did not form any part of the royal funeral. It was a memorial service held especially for those members of the house of lords and house of commons, who were unable to go to Windsor.

Electric standards were fixed around the place in Westminster hall where the catafalque stood. The public was admitted until ten o'clock at night. The catafalque occupied the spot on which Gladstone's catafalque stood.

The Court at Windsor.

The court removed to Windsor the day before the funeral. The archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by Canon Wilberforce, conducted a short service at Westminster hall on the arrival of the body on May 17. The members of both houses of parliament attended this service.

Neither M. Loubet, M. Delcasse nor M. Clemenceau formed part of the French mission to attend the funeral of King Edward. Premier Briand intended to go, but also gave up the idea, owing to the fact that Emperor William was there. Under these circumstances the mission was purely formal. It consisted of M. Pichon, minister of foreign affairs; General Dalstein, military governor of Paris; Admiral Marquis and an attache representing President Fallieres.

Roosevelt Among the Monarchs.

Ex-President Roosevelt, who was named as special envoy of the United States to attend the funeral of King Edward, was presented to King George soon after his arrival in London. Mr. Roosevelt occupied a place with the visiting monarchs in the funeral procession and attended the burial at Windsor.

Jackies Drew Carriage.

King George being so closely identified with the navy, the naval contingents took a prominent part in the ceremonies. Bluejackets drew the gun carriage to Windsor, as they did the carriage which bore the body of Victoria, although on that occasion they did so because the horses became restive.

Soldiers from the king's company, grenadier guards, kept sentry watch over the body in the throneroom at Buckingham palace. They were relieved each hour. With simple ceremony some one of the visiting royalties entered the room every now and then, and the widowed queen went there frequently.

Body in Magnificent Tomb.

The body of King Edward lies with that of his immediate ancestors in the magnificent mausoleum at Frogmore, in the Home park of Windsor castle. In this structure, erected by Queen Victoria at a cost of $1,000,000, Prince Albert Edward, father of the late king, was laid to rest in 1861. In the same year Queen Victoria's mother, the duchess of Kent, was buried in an elaborate tomb in the grounds near by. In 1901 Queen Victoria herself was buried in the mausoleum beside her husband.

Queen Mother's Grief Deep.

The successive delays in the removal of King Edward's body from the bedroom where he died to the throne room at Buckingham palace were due to Queen Alexandra's reluctance to allow the body to be removed from the proximity of her own apartments.

All arrangements had been made for the reception of the body in the throne room and notices were issued to members of the household that they would be permitted to view the body lying in state there, but day by day the removal was postponed and the invitations deferred.

The queen's private apartments communicate directly with those of the late king, and it is not known how often she visited the room in which her dead husband lay or the duration of the vigils she made there, but it is said her sister, the dowager empress of Russia, feared her grief might prove too great a strain.

During the later years of the king's life he and the queen were on the most excellent terms of friendship and good feeling. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say they were deeply attached to one another. The king was most kind and considerate in his attitude toward his consort, who valued highly the attentions he always showed her.

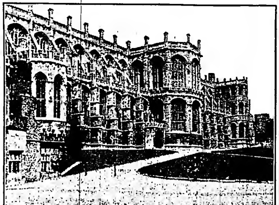
King's Consideration for Consort.

For years they had been, to quote an informant of credit, "the best of pals," and while the inclusion in the list published in the papers of a house party at Sandringham of a certain woman's name caused some astonishment in general society, there was considerable the more astonishment among those in the inner circles of court life at the efforts made by a foreign ambassador to suppress any mention of the woman's name in the list of guests who were invited to meet the king at his country house.

Queen Alexandra herself, by a letter which the London Times described as artless, has shown how deeply she is affected by the death of her consort. Authoritative details of what passed on the day of Queen Alexandra's return to England show in what regard King Edward held his queen.

On that Thursday before his death Edward was continually speaking of her majesty to his entourage. In the morning he announced his intention to go to the station to meet her on her arrival, and when he was forced to bow to the advice of his physicians in this matter he said he would at least meet her at the head of the stairs in Buckingham palace.

When the queen arrived King Edward, by an effort which taxed his powers to the utmost, stood up to receive her. As she clasped him in her arms he fell back into the chair in a state of collapse. For a time it was feared the end was at hand.



ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR, FROM WHENCE, AFTER THE FINAL CEREMONIES THE BODY OF THE LATE KING WAS CONVEYED TO THE MAUSOLEUM.

A Census Question.

Here is a sample of one of the tests given to the men who took the examination to be census enumerators. The test is not exactly as it appears on the question sheets, but is given from the memory of one of the men who took the examination:

Sarah Green and Jim Brown were married in London, England. They lived there four years, one child was born to them, then they emigrated to the United States. A child was born to them on the ocean. They lived in New York for nine years, during which time three more children were born. Then they moved to Ohio and another child was born. Then Sarah and Jim disagreed and were divorced, and Sarah married another man and a child was born to the new union. Jim meantime was naturalized.

The problem was to place the various facts on the enumeration blank as they should appear when the census is taken.—Columbus Dispatch.

A Genius.

A genius is merely a fool vindicated.

His Thirst Varied.

A lady about to deliver a temperance lecture thought it well to get her information at first hand, so she interviewed a workingman. "Is it true," she asked, "that you working men drink a great quantity of beer every day?" "I don't know, ma'am," he replied; "it all depends. Some days I've seen me drink 18 or 20 pints; while, on the other hand, some days I've seen me drink quite a lot."

Any Name Will Do.

Horse's New Competitor.

The "zebrass" is a new thing in the world, it never having existed until a year ago. It is the hybrid offspring of the African zebra and the Texas donkey. There are at the government experiment station at Bethesda, Md., six young zebrasses.

Their sire is the royal Abyssinian zebra which King Menelik gave to President Roosevelt. They are regarded as offering great promise. Certain of them combine the docility, strength and utility of the mother with the spirit, activity and beauty of the father. The yearlings are already larger than their mother. They are beautifully built and should be adapted to the many uses to which the domestic animal is put.—Scientific American.

HELP FOR THE AGED.

No Need to Longer Suffer from Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Catherine Sullivan, 1712 Moffott St., Joplin, Mo., says: "Like most elderly people, I suffered from kidney trouble for years. My back ached intensely and there was a feeling of numbness in my spine. My hands cramped and the urinary passages were profuse. Doctors prescribed for me but I was not benefited. At last I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They drove my troubles away, and I now enjoy excellent health."

The Jeweled Set.

An actress said of Eleanor Robson: "She is a dear. She has married August Belmont. Now she is in the set that I once heard her so wittily ridicule.

"She said that in conversation with a leading matron of this gilded, this jeweled set, she once said:

"'And where do you think you'll spend the summer, Mrs. Van Gelt?'

"'Er—the North Cape, I believe,' Mrs. Van Gelt answered. One can get ski-ing there all through August, you know.'

"'And where will you spend the winter, then?'

"'Oh, Florida, by all means. There's such ripping January bathing at Palm Beach.'"

A Storekeeper Says:

"A lady came into my store lately and said:

"'I have been using a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove all winter in my apartment. I want one now for my summer home. I think these oil stoves are wonderful. If only women knew what a comfort they are, they would all have one. I spoke about my stove to a lot of my friends, and they were astonished. They thought that there was smell and smoke from an oil stove, and that it heated a room just like any other stove. I told them of my experience, and one after another they got one, and now, not one of them would give hers up for five times its cost.'"

The lady who said this had thought an oil stove was all right for quickly heating milk for a baby, or boiling a kettle of water, or to make coffee quickly in the morning, but she never dreamed of using it for difficult or heavy cooking. Now—she knows.

Do you really appreciate what a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove means to you? No more coal to carry, no more coming to the dinner table so tired out that you can't eat. Just light a Perfection Stove and immediately the heat from an intense blue flame shoots up to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven. But the room isn't heated. There is no smoke, no smell, no outside heat, no drudgery in the kitchen where one of these stoves is used.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

She Ate It

By SHEELA ESTHER DUNN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

In Belgium the month of May is known as the Virgin's month and consecrated to the Virgin Mary. In the province of Liege during May young girls have a pretty way of learning whom they shall marry. A group of maidens arrange to meet at sunrise, walk through the fields until they come to a hedge, and, selecting a spot unexposed to the highway, they choose a honeysuckle bush beneath which to perform their mystic rites. Each girl selects three blades of grass, cuts the tops to equal lengths and to each ties a colored thread of silk. Black represents a bachelor, red an unknown lover and green the person the girl in her heart wishes to marry. Ten days afterward they return to the spot where they left the blades growing, and that blade of the three which has grown highest represents the lover that is destined for the maiden's husband.

There lived in this province a poor girl named Anna DeWindt. She was an adopted daughter of an old couple who worked a small farm. Anna was a fair complexioned, fair haired, blue eyed maiden, her pure heart being plainly manifest in her countenance. The adjoining farm on the east was a much larger one and owned by a farmer named DeRoade, with one son, Belleger. Helleger DeRoade was at the university when Anna DeWindt came to live at the adjoining farm. When he returned for his spring vacation he saw her busy about the adjoining premises, but she was so far from him that he could not tell whether she was comely or ugly. Taking a glass, he brought the image nearer and discovered what he was pleased to call his "Madonna."

From that time when he would see Anna on the porch of the house or back in the kitchen garden he would watch her through his glass and longed to go out and chat with her.

His vacation came to an end, and he experienced a pang at leaving his Madonna, whom he had been used to bringing so near to him by means of his glass. On the morning of his departure he was obliged to rise early. Going out on to the porch, he sniffed the delicious spring air. The sun was just rising. He walked about, presently going under a tree with overhanging branches. A door opened in the next house, and Anna and another girl came out and walked directly toward him. They advanced to the hedge that separated the two places and were screened from him by its twigs and leaves.

Stealing out of his retreat, stooping that he might not be seen, he went treading on the soft grass to the hedge. On reaching it he heard coming from a few yards distant on the other side their soft voices. Anna's companion was speaking.

"This is the bachelor," she said, tying a thread on a spear of grass. "This is the unknown," tying another, "and this," tying a third, "is my dear love."

"And who is your dear love?" asked Anna, who was herself tying threads on blades of grass.

"John Ten Eyck. Who is yours?"

"I can't tell you; it is so foolish of me."

"You needn't. I know already. It is the handsome student in the DeRoade place."

Anna made no reply, but Helleger, having found an opening just big enough to give him a view of her face, saw a blush overspread her features.

He was astonished. A girl whom he had not suspected of having been aware of his existence had indicated with the green thread that she had taken him into her innocent heart.

Having tied the blades of grass and cut them to a uniform length the two girls went back to the house and the student departed for the university.

* * * * * * *

At Amsterdam several years later Helleger and his Madonna met. Her people had received a small legacy and had come to Amsterdam to claim it. Helleger DeRoade did not betray the fact that he had seen Anna before; certainly did not mention that he had looked at her through a fieldglass. Nevertheless he yielded to an irresistible impulse to make her his wife.

In Holland if a young man wishes to ask the hand of a girl in marriage he buys a sweet cake, takes it to her house and in presence of her family places it on a table before her. The family affect not to notice the gift, while the girl, if she accepts him, eats the cake. If she refuses him she leaves the cake on the table.

DeRoade took a cake and laid it before Anna. A blush came to her cheek, and she put out her hand toward it, but did not take it. Was she yielding to a natural coquetry or had she some reason for hesitating? Helleger said to her:

"Am I not he of the green thread?"

The blush on her cheek deepened to scarlet; she hid her face in her hands. At last she said:

"Tell me how you learned about the green thread."

"I will if you will tell me about how you came to know anything about me."

"You must first tell me how you knew about me," she replied.

He shrank from telling her that he had been looking at her through a spyglass. He took up the cake and handed it to her.

She ate it.

ARE PLANNING ON A BIG CELEBRATION

Laying of Corner Stone of New Court House Is Arousing Enthusiasm.

Committee Has Prepared a Program That Promises to Mark an Epoch.

On Saturday of this week the corner stone of the magnificent new Red Lake County court house will be laid, and the ceremonies as planned by the committee in charge, give every evidence of being successful from start to finish. Time rolls on in rapid flight, and the chance of witnessing so impressive a ceremony as the laying of a court house corner stone comes but once in a life time. For this reason, each and every one who will be present and none are barred from attending will fully realize the importance of the occasion. Red Lake Falls in particular, and Red Lake county in general will have every reason to be proud of the new building, and it is hoped that the enthusiasm of the witnesses to the ceremony will know no bounds.

No big plans or program will be arranged. The band will be present and will render several selections. The short history of the county which has been prepared by a committee appointed for that purpose, will be placed in the stone, and the stone itself will be laid by the county commissioners.

Arden Alvester.

Arden Alvester, the seventeen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Alvester, who reside seven miles northwest of town, died at the family home last Monday evening. He had been sick for the past four years with consumption, but until Saturday had not been confined to his bed.

The remains were taken on Tuesday evening's train to Cyrus, Polk county, where interment was made. The young man's parents and his grandmother, Mrs. Nels Alfson accompanied the remains to Cyrus.

Reception for Senator Works.

Senator S. D. Works, who was in the city Friday to give the commencement address, was the guest of honor at an informal banquet at Paul's hotel Friday evening. The gathering was far removed from anything of a political nature and both democrats and Republicans joined hands across the table and drank toasts to the honored guest. A light lunch followed by cigars and short speeches by those present constituted the evening's program.

THE NEW BANK IS A SURE THING

L. C. Simons Says That New Institution Will Open in the Lemieux Block.

To be Known as Farmers National Bank of Red Lake Falls.

L. C. Simons was in town Monday and when interviewed about the report that a new bank in which he is to be interested, is to be started in Red Lake Falls, he said: "Yes, the report is true—all true. We have bought the Lemieux block and we bought it for bank purposes. The bank will be opened up just as soon as arrangements can be made. We hope to have the location on the corner, though Mr. Schreiter's lease runs for a time yet. But the bank will be started soon either in the corner room or the room occupied by the Sunshine store."

L. C. Simons, M. C. Tifft of the insurance commissioners department and three other St. Paul bankers have made application for a charter for the Farmers National Bank of Red Lake Falls. Besides these, others will be interested in the new bank.

From the foregoing the natural conclusions is that the new bank will be opened in a few weeks.

Good News!

We trust you read our former advertisement regarding gasoline stoves. We have no intention of boring you with this subject but we believe that if the advantages of a gasoline cook stove have once been properly presented to you, you will be enthusiastically in favor of buying one. A gasoline stove in the home means just this: You don't have to build a fire an half hour or so before meal time; you do not have to suffer the discomfort of all the heat of a coal or wood range; the meal is economically and quickly prepared and much time and labor is saved.

An investment of a few dollars buys a "Quick Meal" gasoline stove—the best made—with an oven. You will get your money's worth in one month's use during the hot weather. Call us on the telephone, send us a postal card or let us know in some other way—any way at all but let us know—and we will send a stove on approval to your home if desired. A salesman will be sent along to explain its method of operation. Then you can keep it or send it back, just as you please. Now we trust this statement will be received and treated in the same kindly spirit in which it was written, as we are certain you will be much pleased with one of our "Quick Meal" gasoline stoves. "SERVICE AND QUALITY"

SENATOR STEPHENS AS FOXY GRANDPA

Works Out Clever Scheme For Bettering Condition of His Pet Candidates.

Paul Pry Sees Through Plans and Then Gives the Whole Secret Away.

St. Paul, June 7.—Talking about king-makers and slate-makers and that sort of thing, don't overlook Aandy Stephens of Crookston. He knows things. He has been next to the game for many years. He has been next to the big fellows—has been made us of by them and has made use of their influence. For many years when the Republican managers were doing things, Andy has been on the inside. Andy is now close to the governor. It is in pursuance of his advice that the governor did not attend the Crookston conservation convention. Too nearly conflicting interests there. Eberhart better keep awey and not commit himself. Andy was confident he could manege things better with him out of the way.

Arcades Ambo.

Andy is hand in glove with Ed. Smith, the Minneapolis Republican boss and handy man for various interests. Incidentally he is the connecting link between the governor's organization and Jim Tawney's machine. He and Elmer Tawney are interested in a string of banks up north which Elmer personally looks after. When Elmer and Andy get together they fix things up. When you want to know really what's doing in state politics keep your eye on Senator Stephens.

Political Vagaries.

Senator Stephens was the big man at the Crookston convention. He managed things. Ostensibly tabooing politics at the convention, Andy has taken care to make it the hot-bed for spronting political fortunes. From the capitol of Polk he has sounded the Republican key note of the political campaign. "We lost but once before," said he, "by going off on vagaries. They still outvote us down at St. Paul but if we steer clear of vagaries I pledge you that the Republican convention" will do so and so. Mark the "I pledge you". Stephens speaks as one having authority. He has. He talks by the book. And he talks too ex cathedra for those who will control the Republican convention. He knows who they are. The rest of us can only guess who they will be. The wily Andy has evidently been delegated to speak for them.

Hobbyhorses in Stall.

"Vagaries." What are vagaries? One's mind instantly reverts to our anti-saloon friends with their county option propoganda. Let it be recalled also that Represetative Bjorge is ambling oround Crookston these days. There you have it. Let those who have hobby-horses take notice. If they want to get in the Republican convention they must leave their prancing steeds behind. Andy will have none of them. They aren't going to be allowed to disturb the harmony of the Republican convention—not this time.

Fixing the Slats.

But that is not all the Polk county statesman is up to. He is wet nurse to the Bagley banker's new-born political ambitions. Because he wants Kaiser to be state treasurer and considering his banking interests there are obvious reasons for this he is shooing other candidates off from his politicals preserves. Doc. Cole must make way there. Bob Wells receives no kindly greetings. For the auditor's office, Iverson is the machine candidate; for lieutenant governor, who?

Smith in Training.

And this raises the query, why was Ed. Smith sworn in to that office the other day after shying clear of it for six long months. Its a bold thing to do to set up Ed. Smith's name on the second place on the Republican ticket; but Stephens is equal to any coup d'etot. Who else is there? Doc. Gates, as everybody knows has been coquetting with the county option people. Since vagaries are to be steered away from, clearly he won't do it. Gordon is flatfooted against the machine, and insurgency will not be countenanced. On the other hand, consider Smith. His location is just right. Stephens' friends are his friends. They have long trained together, Smith playing Damon to Stephens' Pythias. In this office a nomination is equal to an election. Smith is known to be in the governor's confidence and to have long enjoyed it. Indeed it is no secret that when Eberhart was lieutenant governor he gave Smith carte blanche to pick out the best things for himself and his friends. Smith occupying the

WAS ADJUDGED INSANE

Moses Peleran of Thief River Taken to Fergus Falls.

Probate Judge Richardson was at Thief River Falls Tuesday conducting a special term of probate court for the purpose of examining into the condition of Moses Peleren, as to his sanity. Several witnesses were examined and as the evidence of all tended to show that the prisoner was an irresponsible party, the Judge committed him to Fergus Falls, where he was taken Wednesday by Sheriff Nelson.

Peleran, who also goes by the name of Parenteau, is a familar charecter around Thief River Falls. Since childhood he has been subject to epileptic fits and this is undoubtedly responsible for the unbalancing of his mind. At the time of his examination he was practically rational but the evidence introduced showed that he was not in condition to be left loose, hence the decision of the court.

WAS FISHING ILLEGALLY

Henry Jonke Pays $12 for Fishing With Net.

While in the city Wednesday, Game Warden Munch swore out a warrent against Henry Jonke, charging illegal fishing. Jonke was taken before Justice of the Peace Higinbotham, where, in view of the fact that it was his first offence he was fined $12. Jonke it seems, had been fishing with a net at Healy's dam, contrary to law, so his arrest was caused. There are several others here who have been doing considerable net fishing and Warden Munch has his eyes on other offenders who will be prosecuted unless the practice is discontinued.

STATE TREASURER DINEHART IS DEAD

Promising Career of Prominent Official Suddenly Cut Short.

Clarence C. Dinehart, state treasurer of Minnesota, died at 3:30 Wednesday morning in Luther hospital in St. Paul.

Mr. Dinehart, one of Minnesota's most brilliant young politicians, was operated on Saturday for appendicitis. He seemed to rally satisfactorily, but relapse followed relapse, until shortly before midnight Tuesday the attending physician, Dr. E. I. Brown, told the parents of the doomed man that the end must be near.

Mr. Dinehart's condition first became serious enough to demand the attention of a physician about a week ago. An examination established the fact that the appendix was highly inflamed, causing the patient much pain. He was taken to the hospital and on Saturday, when the inflamation became less acute, it was decided, after a conference with his parents, to proceed at once with an operation.

For twenty-four hours following the operation, which was performed in Luther hospital, his case was not regarded as being particularly dangerous. Then it developed that he would be unable to take the required nourishment in the natural manner, and unusual methods of supplying him with food were resorted to.

The dead man was twice elected state treasurer on the Republican ticket, although only thirty-three years old.

He was an announced candidate for the Republican nomination this fall for Congresman from the Second district, now represented by Congressman Hammond of St. James. It had been freely predicted that he would secure the nomination and election.

He was a graduate of the University of Minnesota and from Yale. He was distinguished as an orator and public officer of unusual abilities.

"No man knows what the future held for him," said an admirer at the capital, "it was filled with possibilities. He seemed certain of a seat in Congress and Clarence Dinehart is the sort of material from which presidents are made.

CROOKSTON BISHOP NOW IN OFFICE

Installation Services Were Conducted This Week by Diocese Laymen.

Large Gathering Present to Witness Ceremonies of Assuming Office.

Bishop Timothy Corbett was duly installed as bishop of the Crookston diocese on Tuesday of this week. The ceremonies were held at Crookston and were attended by many outside visitors in addition to the district priests and laymen who participated.

The receptions for Bishop Corbett, Bishop McGolrick of Duluth and Archbishop Ireland on Monday marked the opening of the two days celebration.

Bishop Corbett was met at the train by visiting priests and the streets were lined on both sides by hundreds of Knights of Columbus from Crookston, Bemidji, Grand Forks and other cities. Following the reception at the train the party entered St Mary's church where Bishop Corbett said mass.

Prior to mass, Father Fayolle, of Red Lake Falls, welcomed the bishop and his earnestness was impressive. He said the priests of the diocess and many of the laymen knew and loved their new bishop and that all would love him and uphold his hands in the great work that was before him.

Bishop Corbett's address in response was full of that earnestness that has characterized his residence at Duluth, stating that although it grieved him much to think of leaving his parish at Duluth, he was not discouraged at the great work before him.

"I know the self sacrificing character of the priests in this diocese," he said, "and I know what can be expected of them. Uphold them in all their efforts. They will do their part. You must do yours. Let everyone assume the responsibility that falls upon them.

"I come to you as a bishop of the people, and we must work together. Come to me with your troubles and I will help you if possible. Let us aim to make temperate, virtuous law abiding citizens, thus exemplifying the teaching of our church and making firmer the foundation of the great country in which we live."

He closed with a final appeal for unity of action, and the co-operation of all in accomplishing the great work ahead in the diocese of Crookston. His remarks were made with an impassioned eloquence that appealed to every person present very strongly and points toward a united following of most able leadership.

The counties comprising the new diocese are Becker, Beltrami, Clay, Clearwater, Hubbard, Polk, Kittson, Marshall, Norman, Red Lake, Mahnomen and Roseau.

Archbishop Ireland, in his installation address, spoke words of hope and blessing for the diocease of Crookston and said the present occasion was the beginning of a wonderous era of spiritual grace. He traced the history of this section when it was trackless to the present time, when 35 priests are laboring in the field and the wonderful possibilities which are present with rich land, no better on earth he said, its salubrious climate and the great promise it gave for the future.

Among the priests from this vicinity who were in attendance were Fathers Fayolle of Red Lake Falls, Roy of Lomhort, Theillon of Gentilly, and Veillieux of Terrebonne.

Banquets, auto rides through the city of Crookston and into the adjoining vicinity, receptions and lectures by prominent speakers marked the closing of a period which will mark an epoch in the Catholic history of this section of the tsate. People, irrespective of religious tendencies gathered as one body to pay respects and to extend a welcome to Bishop Corbett. But one thought was uppermost in the minds of all and that was to give the new dignitary a fitting welcome and to thoroughly convince him that in all his undertakings in his new work he would hae the hearty co-operation of all.

It will be just an ordinary game of base ball with plenty of excitement and there isn't any question that if the roads and weather are favorable, a number from here will accompany the team.

Sixteen young people received diplomas from the Red Lake Falls high school Friday evening, the presentation of the coveted sheep skins by Dr. N. M. Watson, president of the board of education, being one of features of the program for the annuel commencement exercises at the Bijou theatre.

The commencement address was delivered by Senator S. D. Works of Manato. Senator Works gave an able and eloquent address on the subject, "Individualism." He urged the young people to strong individual effort. All good things, he said, are accomplished if not by the effort of an individual, by the combined individual efforts of thinking people inspired by common desires. He said that the epoch-making events in the history of the country were the results of the individual efforts of people inspired by high purposes. The address was an able one and was well received by the audience.

The invocation was offered by Rev. Fr. Fayolle. Songs by the high school girls chorus and by the mixed chorus were delightfully rendered.

Other musical numbers were given by Freund's orchestra.

IT WAS A MONSTROUS MEETING

Big Noise Made at Crookston Was Heard all over the State.

Conservation Meeting Biggest Thing in History of Northern Minnesota.

Hundreds of northern Minnesota enthusiastic boosters gathered at Crookston last week for the big conservation meeting and it was the biggest of the kind ever held in northern Minnesota.

People from all over the state were in attendance at the meeting and the politician or statesman or other aspirant for public office, of whom there were many at the meeting, has his eyes opened if he had not previously been able to see that northern Minnesota is entitled to and is to receive some consideration at the hands of the next legislature.

The meeting was full of politics to the running over point—not partizan agitations; just plain politics.

This year's political platform that does not have some northern Minnesota planks in it, is going to be a pretty wobbly sort of a contraption. That is the concensus of opinion of the hundreds of people who attended the big meeting at Crookston.

The Junior Banquet.

The Junior banquet, given in the M. B. A. hall last Saturday evening, brought to a most successful close the events of commencement week of the Red Lake Falls High School. The hall was tastily decorated with the class colors and the evening was one of the most pleasant of the season.

A "pi" contest, a hat-making contest, in which each contestant made a paper hat and then wore it for exhibition purposes, were the amusements of the evening. Supt. Koos officiated as toastmaster, and toasts were given by Albany Deforge, Robert Zaiser, Geo. Tandberg, Miss Twinum and Miss Gibbs of the faculty, Lou Green as president of the class of the Seniors, and Mona Zeh as class president, for the Juniors.

The lunch which was served in four courses, was the crowning feature of the whole affair, the manner of serving being especially pleasing. Following is the lunch by courses:

Wafers — Fruit Salad
Creamed Chicken — Potato Salad
Sandwiches
Ice Cream — Cake
Coffee
Candy — Nuts

The Standard Oil company has increased the wages of its workmen from 6 to 10 per cent. The order is retroactive and became effective May 1. It is estimated that the company will add from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 to its annual pay roll expense. The new scale affects employees engaged in the company's works and factories, but the office men will not be benefited by this increase. Most of the employees who will get the increase are laborers, and the advance applies to all the subsidiary companies in the United States. The company has approximately 70,000 employees. The Standard is one of the very few big concerns of this country which has never had a strike among its employes.

FOURNIER'S TRIAL

LAWYERS TRY TO RULE OUT EVIDENCE OR MURDER OF N. O. DAHL.

CRIME COMMITTED IN 1904

Decides the Two Cases Are So Interwoven That Evidence of Either Is Admissible.

Aitkin—The trial for his life of Paul Fournier, of Beltrami county, on the charge of having killed Aagot Dahl at Quiring, Beltrami county, April 7, 1904, was commenced in the district court, with Judge C. W. Stanton, of Bemidji, sitting on the bench, the case having been transferred from Beltrami county to Aitkin county by Judge McClenahan, who granted the application of Fournier's attorney, C. W. Scrutchin, of Bemidji, for a change of venue. The attorney alleged prejudice and inability to get a fair trial in Beltrami county, where the defendant had once been convicted of the charge of having killed N. O. Dahl.

Judga C. W. Stantnn.

Chester McKusick, of Bemidji, county attorney of Beltrami county, is in charge of the case against Fournier for the state and he is being assisted in getting the jury by Louis Hallum, of Aitkin, county attorney of Aitkin county. C. W. Scrutchin, Bemidji's colored attorney, is defending Fournier and Attorney Crowell, of Brainerd, is assisting Scrutchin.

The first clash of the attorneys occurred when the state began the introduction of testimony relative to the killing of N. O. Dahl, in connection with the present charge against Fournier of killing Aagot Dahl.

Attorney McKusick questioned Dr. Marcum, former assistant coroner of Beltrami county, relative to condition of the body of N. O. Dahl when found, and offered in evidence twelve pieces of the skull of N. O. Dahl to show the nature of two bullet wounds which caused the death of the old man.

Attorney Scrutchin, for the defense, objected to this testimony as being inadmissible. Defense contended the state was trying to guess at what time the Dahls disappeared and declared nothing had even been produced to actually prove when the father and daughter disappeared.

Attorney Scrutchin declared the state was attempting to prove a crime independent of the Aagot Dahl murder.

Judge C. W. Stanton overruled the objection, stating that while proof of the killing of N. O. Dahl would not prove the killing of the daughter, yet the circumstances were so intimately connected that the testimony was admissible.

Dr. Marcum then told of the finding of the body of N. O. Dahl under a balsam tree. The doctor described the fractures of the skull.

Fournier gazed steadily at the pieces of skull and displayed no emotion whatever at the gruesome exhibit.

Eugene Caldwell, chief witness for the state, was called to the stand shortly before the hour for noon adjournment. He testified as to the last time he saw Miss Dahl alive, declaring he found everything all right when he passed the Dahl cabin, April 6, 1904. He passed again the morning of April 8, but could find no trace of habitation.

Caldwell is the man who found the body of Dahl and his testimony at the first trial was impeached, the defense declaring that, contrary to his assertion that he was not aware that the reward had been raised from $200 to $1,500, information to that effect reached him one hour before he discovered the body. From the trend of the case thus far it is quite evident that the defense is preparing to move along the same line and impeach his testimony on this point.

County Optionists Speak at Windom.

Windom.—Sunday was a big day for the county optionists of this locality. Superintendent P. J. Youngdahl, Donald MacKenzie, of Mankato, and Rev. W. H. Miller, of Minneapolis, were the principal speakers. Each of these men spoke in the various churches in the forenoon and in the evening a mass meeting was held in the opera house, at which Superintendent Youngdahl was the principal speaker. Mr. Youngdahl urges every voter to work for a county option candidate, regardless of party.

Cale Tragedy Casts Gloom.

Willmar. — A very deep gloom fell over this city when the news reached here of the murder of Goldie Cale, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Cale, at the hands of John McGuire, the aged Swift county farmer, who shot her and then committed suicide. The tragedy is all the sadder, as the murdered girl's mother is critically ill with tuberculosis, one of her sisters is afflicted with the same malady and two smaller sisters are confined to their home with measles.

SCHOOL TEACHER MURDERED.

Willmar Man, After Committing Deed, Ends His Own Life.

Willmar. — Miss Goldie Cale, 23 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Cale, of this city, was shot and killed by John McGuire, a farmer of Heghert, who then ended his own life by hanging.

The girl had been teaching school near Heghert, a village 45 miles west of Benson, and was boarding at the home of McGuire, who had repeatedly attempted to keep company with her although he had been repulsed several times. The family were eating supper at the time of the tragedy and without warning McGuire left the table, and in a few moments entered the room with a double barrel shotgun in his hands. The girl seemed to know who he was after and jumped from the table running to the kitchen and thence to her bedroom, where she locked the door, McGuire in pursuit. While the farmer was battering down the door, Miss Cale pounded out a window and jumped to the ground making for a neighbor's home, a mile distant. McGuire followed and when within 600 feet of the girl fired a shot, the charge entering the lower part of her neck. She fell to the ground and although dead, McGuire fired a second shot, this charge setting fire to her dress. McGuire's mother who had seen the shooting from a window, rushed to the girl and extinguished the flames.

Hangs Self on Bridge.

McGuire then calmly walked back to the house, took his clothes and after taking a horse drove to the Pomme de Terre river, four miles from his home, where he took a rope, which he was carrying, and after tieing one end to the bridge which spans the river, jumped into the water with the other end around his neck.

His body was found later by the Benson authorities who had been informed of the crime.

The girl's body was brought to her home in this city. No cause is known for the deed except that the jilting of McGuire by the girl is thought to have preyed on his mind.

SKIPS ON EMPLOYER'S CASH.

Is Arrested Following Return, However, and Lodged in Jail.

Winona.—Samuel Thompson, the young farm hand who is said to have got away with $500 from the strong box of John Thompson, on his farm near Lewiston in March, is in jail here after having been off on a long and delightful trip abroad to his old home in Norway. His correspondence with a woman friend in southern Illinois served as a clew that ultimately resulted in his capture by Sheriff Parr of Winona at Pardeville, Wis., today.

Last March Thompson, the farmer, and his employe, Thompson, drove to market at Lewiston with a load of hogs, for which the farmer received $1,000. Returning home, the money was placed in the strong box in the house, where it remained for the night. The farm hand arose early the following morning and left the house, presumably to do his chores. When he remained out longer than usual suspicion was aroused and a search of the money chest revealed the fact that $500 was missing, but another similar amount in the same chest had been overlooked. A hunt was immediately instituted, but the fugitive had gained too good a start and reached Lewiston in time to make his getaway.

The authorities here learned of the friend of the missing man in southern Illinois and when Thompson wrote to her she gave him up to the sheriff. He was at Pardeville, employed with a construction gang in railroad work.

DRAINAGE IN VALLEY OF RED.

General System On a Big Scale Is Being Gradually Worked Out.

Crookston.—Some conception of the amount of drainage work being done in this section can be realized by the verified statement that O. L. Hamery, of this city, drainage engineer, has the supervision of 500 miles of ditches, practically all in Marshall, Kittson and Roseau counties, though there are a few miles in Beltrami county and a few in Polk.

For practically all of this work the contracts have been let, and the ditches will be completed the coming fall.

Mr. Hamery is but one of many drainage engineers in Crookston and surrounding territory, and thus it is seen that the work in the aggregate is immense. The system in this section of the state within a few years will be in shape for tile drainage, which will become general. In the past it has not been practical, because the general drainage system was not far enough advanced to furnish outlets for tile drainage. However, a few farmers have experimented with tile drainage, and it has proved thoroughly satisfactory.

Much of the land that will be reclaimed is exceptionally rich and has been termed as swamp land in the past. It has a rich layer of decayed vegetation on top and will produce wonderful crops when the water problem has been disposed of.

GENERAL WOOD COMING.

National President of Holstein Association Will Speak At Northfield.

Faribault.—The first general meeting of the Minnesota State Holstein Association will be held May 27 at Northfield. General C. W. Wood, of Worcester, Mass., president of the National Holstein-Friesian Association will speak, also Professor Hecker and Professor Grout, of the Minnesota State Experiment Station, and A. W. French, state dairy and food commissioner.

Would Wear Togas.

Windom. — Politics in Cottonwood and Jackson counties is beginning to boil. C. W. Gillam, a prominent grain man, of this place, is seeking the senatorship from these two counties and is opposed by A. C. Olson, a prominent farmer living a few miles south of here in Jackson county. Mr. Gillam is a strong county option man. For a time the field seemed open for representative from Cottonwood county as it is thought D. A. Stuart will not again seek that office.

NO RIGHT TO FLAG

VESSEL SEARCHED BY NICARAGUANS WAS NOT AMERICAN REGISTERED.

NO ACTION TO BE TAKEN

Advices Received at Washington State That Esfuerno Was a Nicaraguan Boat and Not Under U. S. Protection.

Washington, D. C., May 26.—If the Schooner Esfuerno, which was searched by the Nicaraguan gunboat Venus, was flying the United States flag at the time she was overhauled, as has been reported, she was carrying the stars and stripes without any authority, according to official advices received here.

The navy department has authentic information that the Esfuerno is not an American schooner. She is said to have a Nicaraguan register and is entitled to fly the Nicaraguan flag. It is thought that she may be partly owned by American capital, but that in no sense entitled her to the protection of the United States as an American vessel.

Under these circumstances the American government would not be justified in taking any action whatever.

JEWS DRIVEN OUT.

Affecting Scenes in Kiev, When Paupers are Driven Out.

St. Petersburg, May 26.—The exodus of Jewish families from Kiev has begun. The total departures from that city up to last night were 300 prescribed families belonging exclusively to the poorest classes. The expulsion is attended with harrowing sights.

The exodus is compulsory and in fulfillment of an order of the Russian government that all Jews who cannot establish a legal claim to residence outside the pale return forthwith to the confines defined in the original Jewish segregation laws. The pale was formed by the Polish Provinces and Ukraine.

The scenes in the streets of Kiev yesterday were affecting. The evicted ones were veritable paupers, lacking all means of sustenance. For the moment the Jewish families' possessions were undisturbed.

Wheat Corner Smashed.

Chicago, May 26.—Sensational declines in the wheat market at today's session of the board of trade, following a private settlement of the May wheat option declined an extreme of 5⅝ cents from last night. September at the bottom showed a decline of 5 cents. In the unloading of a long line, estimated at 5,000,000 bushels, James Patten was reported to have been the seller of the latter preparatory to arranging his affairs for an extended vacation, but the statement was denied by Mr. Patten.

Smothered in Pillow.

Mandan, N. D., May 26.—Mrs. Marguerite Pope was smothered to death in a pillow at the home of her mother here today. She had gone upstairs on an errand during the forenoon and fainted away, falling face down across a bed with her head buried in a pillow.

When she was found her life had been smothered out. She was about 26 years of age. She was formerly a teacher in the Indian school here and had been married about a year.

Gets Honorary Degree.

Cambridge, Eng., May 26.—Roosevelt came here today to receive the honorary degree of doctor of laws from Cambridge university. His visit to the ancient town should be one of the pleasantest memories of his stay in England, for the reception given him by the faculty, students and townspeople was notable. The former president was accompanied from London by Mrs. Roosevelt and his daughter, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

Awaits Taft's Signature.

Washington, May 26.—The house has concurred on the senate amendment to the Hanna bill providing for the opening of the Berthold Indian reservation in North Dakota.

The bill as it now stands is substantially as introduced by its author in the house.

The president will probably sign the bill some time this week. Over 4,000,000 acres of land will be made subject to entry as a result.

Five Brokers Go to Prison.

Cincinnati, O., May 26.—Louis W. Foster, Ed Whall, Walter Campbell, J. M. Scott and Arthur W. Baldwin, the five members of the O'Dell Brokerage company, who were sentenced to jail on charges of using the mails for bucket shop operations, surrendered to United States Marshal Eugene Lewis today. They were taken to the county jails in Dayton and Troy, Ohio.

Meehan Out on Bail.

Minot, N. D., May 26.—Pat Meehan, who has been held in the county jail at Rugby for several months on a charge of murder, arising out of the killing of Ole Rice, at Rugby, during a celebration following the last election in that town, has been released under $10,000 bonds.

Legal Lights Gather.

St. Paul, Minn., May 26.—Attorneys general and their assistants from more than half of the states in the union are here to attend the fourth annual convention of the National Association of Attorneys General which opened at the state capitol today. The convention will continue through tomorrow.

Attorney General George T. Simpson of Minnesota called the meeting to order at 11 this morning and delivered the opening address, his subject being The Removal of Cases in Which the State is a Party From State to Federal Courts.

Twenty Hurt in Collision.

St. Paul, Minn., May 25.—More than thirty-five passengers were injured at Wabash and Exchange street this morning when a Hamline-Union depot car crashed into an interurban car.

The accident followed two explosions in the Hamline-Union depot car, which set the passengers in a wild panic.

Every window in the rear car was shattered, and many were painfully cut trying to climb through the broken panes before the motorman opened the gates. Most of the injured were in this car.

SIGNED UP FOR CAUCUS

FATE OF POSTAL SAVINGS BANK TO BE DETERMINED

Some of the Members of the Party, Fearing to Put Themselves on Record on the Bill,

Washington, May 25.—A caucus of the republican members of the house on the subject of the postal savings bank bill will be held tonight in the chamber of the house of representatives. Not all of the members of the majority party will attend, but the exact number that will purposely absent themselves to prevent their being bound by the action taken tonight is unknown.

Less than a dozen, all "insurgents," so far as known, have declined to sign the call for the caucus. About 170 names were signed to the petition out of the total republican membership of 217, but a large number are absent from the city who would have attached their names to the call had they been in Washington.

The action to be taken at tonight's caucus on the postal savings bank bill is expected to be decisive as far as the house is concerned.

DECISION SOON.

Supreme Court Has Data in Ward-Mountrail Case.

Minot, N. D., May 25.—The county settlement fight between Ward and Mountrail counties has been concluded so far as the trial court is concerned and the record is now ready to be sent to the supreme court for a decision.

The higher court will have but one point to decide that will affect the money which is to change hands, that is whether the roads and bridges are the property of the state or county. Judge Templeton has held with Ward county on this point vesting the title in the state.

The hearing this morning was held for the purpose of stipulating the amount of property that had been lost or destroyed and was not now in existence, amounting to about $9,000, which will be deducted from the settlement. In case the court holds that the depreciation can be allowed he must also hold that an increase can be counted in real estate so that his decision on this point will have little effect on the settlement proper.

As the hearing now stands Mountrail county will owe Ward about $5,000.

Dry Dock Dewey Sinks.

Manila, May 25.—It is the general opinion that the sinking yesterday of the dry dock Dewey was due to carelessness rather than to a deliberate purpose upon the part of station employes who are Japanese, to cause damage.

Experts declare that the great floating dry dock, which was towed here from the United States at much expense, will be saved despite the likelihood that it will be entirely submerged before tomorrow morning.

The port side, including the pumps, is submerged today and partly resting on the bottom.

The starboard side is still exposed, but is settling slowly. It is doubtful whether the starboard pump alone will avail much. The tug Piscataqua is waiting to assist when the sea is calmer. The electrical machinery operating the valves is badly damaged.

Farmer Crushed to Death.

Underwood, N. D., May 25.—Frank Mintzer, aged 23, a prominent and wealthy young farmer was crushed to death on the streets of Underwood this forenoon.

The young fellow owns a section and a half farm near this place. This morning he drove to town and was tying his team to a hitching post in the street when the blooded animals made a break for liberty. Mintzer sprang to catch the reins when one of the horses kicked him, knocking him down. He jumped up and made another attempt to catch them when the same horse lashed out with its feet and kicked him under a wagon loaded with hay that was passing.

The load of hay passed over his head causing almost instant death. His parents live at Mansfield, O., and have been notified.

Thomas of Blooming Prairie, Minn., for $42,343. Mr. Thomas' bid was $40,994. The additions for plate glass windows, for copper front and front doors and for better grade of brick, made up the difference, $1,349, and made the total consideration $42,343.

BOATS IN CRASH

TWENTY LIVES LOST IN COLLISION ON LAKE HURON DURING FOG.

ONLY FOUR ARE RESCUED

Few of the Crew Had Chance to Save Themselves—Many Killed by Falling Hatches, Not Knowing What Happened.

Port Huron, May 24.—Late this afternoon the positive information was received that the big steel steamer Frank H. Goodyear of the Mitchell Transit Co. lies in forty fathoms of water in Lake Huron about thirty-five miles off Point Aux Barques and probably twenty of its seamen have met their graves following a collision between that vessel and the steamer James B. Wood, another steel boat belonging to the Gilchrist Transit Co.

When the two steamers came together, the crew of the Goodyear, which is reported to have been struck amidship, had only time to seize life preservers and only a few could jump overboard before the boat began to fill with water.

Many were in the mess room when the crash came, some jumped into the water and managed to get out of the boat which was fast filling. Suddenly the Goodyear parted in the center and with a sound which could be heard above the whistling of the wood sank out of sight, carrying with it all but five of its crew. The bow of the Wood was stove in, but rested on her bulkhead and although some water flowed into the hold she was kept afloat through the efforts of the pumps.

The following were rescued by the life boat of the Wood: Captain Hemenger, the steward, Frank Bassett, Mrs. Emma Bassett, Frank Mollich, George Grant, and were taken aboard, all in an exhausted condition, caused by their exertions to save themselves and the length of time they were in the water.

Star Witness Testifies.

New York, May 24.—Although the government's star witness Oliver Spitzer, the former dock master who walked out of the Atlanta penitentiary where he had been sent after bossing for years the sugar weighing frauds on the Williamsburg docks had a most interesting story to tell yesterday, it is not mainly on his evidence that the government relies in its effort to convict Charles R. Heike, the American Sugar Refining Co. secretary, of a part in the conspiracy fraud.

His testimony, rather, bad to do with James F. Bendernagel, the refinery cashier, and Earnest F. Garbracht, superintendent, both of whom are on trial with Heike, together with three other former employes of the company.

Striking Miners Riot.

Scranton, Pa., May 24.—A riot broke out among the striking miners at No. 14 colliery of the Pennsylvania Coal Co., near Pittston today following an attempt of a posse of state police, headed by Sergeant Henning, to disperse a crowd of Italians who threatened others when a work train reached the colliery.

Sheriff Rodda of Lucerne county was struck in the head by a coupling pin. One foreigner, Peter Sura, was so severely clubbed by the state policemen that he may die. State trooper Jesper Oftedach was caught under his horse which was felled by a blow on the head, and he was clubbed before the other troopers drove off his assailant.

Will Plan No New Irrigation.

Washington, May 24.—No new irrigation projects will be started by the government within the next ten years, said Director Newell, of the reclamation service, today. The bureau is now bending its energies to complete the work already begun and, in formulating its plans for the next fiscal year, the service has arranged to use advantageously the $30,000,000 bond issue, in case congress authorizes it, or to continue the work without it.

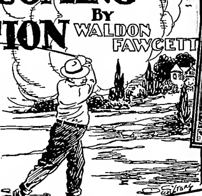
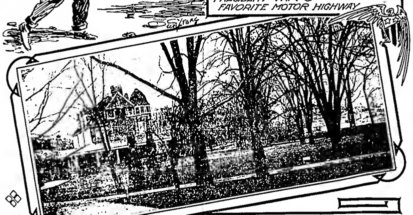
THE PRESIDENT'S FORTHCOMING VACATION

By WALDON FAWCETT



PRESIDENT TAFT'S FAVORITE MOTOR HIGHWAY



SUMMER HOME OF THE PRESIDENT

RESIDENCE OF JOHN HAYS HAMMOND

THE PRESIDENT'S "PRIVATE BEACH" AT BEVERLY, MASS.

THE quaint little community of Beverly, Mass., is pretty certain to enjoy the distinction of ranking as the "summer capital" of the United States so long as William H. Taft is president. The Tafts chose the little seashore resort for a vacation retreat for the first summer of the present [illegible] tration somewhat as an experiment. No member of the family had previously spent much time on the famed "North Shore" of Massachusetts [illegible] they were obliged to [illegible] on hearsay its claims [illegible] as an ideal summer [illegible]. However, after their first [illegible] this pleasure domain the [illegible] household was more [illegible] regarding the locality [illegible] decided to return [illegible]. Hence the [illegible] in extending [illegible] the cottage he occupies [illegible].

[illegible] a half prior to the [illegible] Taft as president [illegible] of the [illegible] members [illegible] of the [illegible] family, had been [illegible] summer at Murray Bay, Canada, a picturesque resort [illegible] the St. Lawrence [illegible] have not, to this day, lost [illegible] of their affection for the hamlet [illegible] the rendezvous of [illegible], but Murray Bay is, of [illegible] in Canada, and the president [illegible] to go beyond the borders of the United States, even for a [illegible]. This put it up to the president and the first lady of the land the [illegible] of selecting a new summer [illegible].

[illegible] the North shore of Massachusetts [illegible] chosen was largely due to the [illegible] of Miss Mabel Boardman, the well known Red Cross leader, and [illegible] Taft's closest personal friend. The Boardmans have long had a summer [illegible] at Manchester-by-the-Sea, which is but [illegible] miles from Beverly and Miss Boardman, like her parents, is more than enthusiastic regarding this "summer colony belt." She accompanied Mrs. Taft on a house hunting expedition [illegible] spring, and was her chief adviser in the selection of the roomy frame cottage which was finally chosen as the "summer White House."

[illegible] factor in the satisfaction of the Tafts, and [illegible] in the decision to return to Beverly this summer, is found in the circumstance that this vacation retreat proved beneficial to Mrs. Taft. It may be remembered that Mrs. Taft broke down in health only a few weeks before the time [illegible] for the departure of the family for their summer home. When the physicians prescribed absolute quiet some of the friends of the mistress of the White House were dubious as to the effect of Beverly, for although the town is a quiet enough community, the whole North shore of Massachusetts is a very lively place socially in summer, even rivaling Newport in that respect, and the migration of a president to a summer resort is always followed by the transfer of many of the diplomatic establishments from Washington, to say nothing of the influx of ambitious social leaders so that a "summer capital" quickly springs into existence as a setting for a "summer White House."

However, all misgivings to the contrary, Mrs. Taft was enabled to enjoy a thoroughly quiet and restful summer at Beverly, and this program will be repeated this season, for the health of the first lady of the land continues anything but robust. The Taft cottage being located on a point of land and surrounded by water on three sides, is well located with reference to quiet, and also for the securing of the sea breezes which have proven Mrs. Taft's best tonic. On the land side the house is located only about a hundred yards from a trolley line, but it is well screened by trees, and the fact that the cottage may be approached by land from only one direction makes it a comparatively simple matter for the secret service men to intercept unwelcome callers.

President Taft has planned for the summer of 1910 a much longer and more restful vacation than he was able to enjoy last year, when, it may be recalled, the extra session of congress and the fight over the tariff kept him in Washington until well into August. The president hopes to get to Beverly early in June, and with the exception of occasional trips, mostly to nearby points, will remain there throughout the heated term. A year ago the president planned to devote most of the summer of 1910 to a trip to Alaska—a journey that would have far surpassed in point of time consumed and number of miles traveled, the famous transcontinental "swing around the circle" in which Taft indulged during the autumn of 1909. However, various influences, primarily the state of Mrs. Taft's health—have caused the president to abandon this Alaska trip, and he will rest quietly at Beverly save for visits to fairs, conventions, etc., none of which will consume more than a few days.

The president is planning a very busy and beneficial summer on the golf links. The courses in the vicinity of Beverly include some of the finest and also some of the most difficult in the country, and the chief magistrate's summer program calls for three or four hours of golf every day. He will not lack for worthy partners and opponents either. His especial chum "Jack" Hammond and W. J. Boardman, have cottages nearby; his brother, C. P. Taft of Cincinnati, also a golfer, has leased a cottage on North shore, to be near his brother this summer, and he will also have with him Capt. Archibald Butt, who in addition to serving as the president's military aide can likewise always be drafted for a golf game. Next to golf the president takes delight in motoring on the magnificent roads of the North shore—perhaps the finest in America. Several of the White House automobiles are transferred to Beverly, and these place the president within easy reach of three or four different golf courses.

Where Men Fought and Fell

Spurred by the efforts of Miss Georgia Frazer, a descendant of an old revolutionary family, and Charles M. Higgins, a wealthy manufacturer of Prospect Park West, Brooklyn, the city authorities are taking steps to acquire for the erection of a suitable monument and a children's playground the plot of ground covering two city blocks on which part of the battle of Long Island was fought in the Revolutionary war on August 27, 1776. The plot is located between Third and Fifth streets and Fourth and Fifth avenues, Brooklyn, and there are now only about ten houses on the entire plot, which is owned by the Litchfield estate. The rest of the land is vacant.

Directly behind the row of houses in Fifth avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, stands an old willow tree, marking the site of the old Stone house at Gowanus, where an important engagement between the British and Americans was fought. The Americans, although inferior in numbers, dislodged the British troops from the old Stone house, which was used as a fort, and as a result Washington was able to cross the East river with his army, thus saving the patriots from utter annihilation and virtually deciding the country's fate.

The old Stone house of Gowanus is not visible now and very few of the present generation know anything about it. The plot where it stands was very low—much lower than the surrounding [illegible]—and it became a dumping ground. As a result the historic house has been buried by 16 feet of earth. A willow tree which stood at the entrance to the old house was also buried, but from its branches rose another willow tree, which is still standing, and it is because of this tree that the movement to uncover the old house and erect a lasting monument to the defenders of the country who fell there has received such an impetus.

Mr. Higgins, who, although of Irish extraction, is an ardent American patriot, was touched by the survival of the old willow and looked upon it as a mute appeal to those now living to remember the men who fought and died that the country might become free forever. His attention was called to the spot by a book written by Miss Frazer in which she gives the history of the old Stone house at Gowanus. Miss Frazer's attention was first called to the house by a painting executed by Louis Grube in 1846 at the order of George Anderson, her granduncle. Miss Frazer spent her girlhood at the home of her uncle, Thomas Easton of Newport, R. I., to whom the painting had been sent, and she took a great interest in the picture and the story attached to it.

At a dinner given recently by the Prospect Heights' Citizens' association at which Mayor Gaynor, who is a neighbor, was present, Mr. Higgins aroused the enthusiasm of the gathering by his appeal for the restoration of the old Stone house and the consecration of the plot surrounding it to the memory of the revolutionary heroes who fell there.

He said it was a patriotic shame that the historic spot should have been neglected so long. Mayor Gaynor, Borough President Steers and other officials who were at the dinner let it be known that they were in favor of the restoration of the old Stone house, and the board of estimate is expected to make an appropriation for the purpose in the near future.

Miss Frazer, who is very modest about her connection with the matter, told a reporter how she came to discover the site of the old Stone house.

"After much research," said she, "I found a bronze tablet that had been erected many years ago on the front of the two-story brick house that stands at the corner of Fifth avenue and Third street. It was almost hidden by grime, and in the shadow of the "L." It contains this inscription under a picture of a battle field:

> "Here on the 27th of August, 1776, 250 out of 400 brave Maryland soldiers under the command of Lord Stirling were killed in combat with British troops under Lord Cornwallis."

"I found that the old Stone house around which the battle was fought, and which was also called the Cortelyou house, had been buried under 16 feet of earth, nobody knowing that it was famous 75 years before the battle of Long Island was fought in and around it. It was built in 1699 by Nicholas Vechte, a Dutch colonist, and in 1790 it passed to the Cortelyous, the price being $12,500. In 1846 the Litchfields, who now own it, bought the property from the Cortelyous. It stood on the banks of a brook emptying into Gowanus creek, 15 or 20 feet below the present street level, and was famous as the largest and most substantial house on Long Island at the time.

"The spot became a city dumping ground, and in 1846 only the upper part of it was visible. Some one took away the iron brace that supported the roof and the roof fell in. Gradually it was covered up entirely, but I believe that when it is unearthed the lower portion of the house will be found in a good state of preservation."

Eggs of Various Birds

Ostriches lay the largest eggs of all birds now extant, according to a writer in the Scientific American, but the ostrich's egg would have appeared small beside that extinct Madagascar bird, the epyornis, which measured more than 30 inches in its smallest circumference. The smallest birds' eggs are those of the minute species of humming birds, which are smaller than the eggs of certain kinds of tropical beetles. But the cuckoo lays the relatively smallest egg. That is to say, while the jackdaw and the cuckoo are about equal in size, the former's egg is five or six times larger than the latter's. The fact that the cuckoo is wont to deposit its eggs in the nests of birds which are usually much smaller than itself doubtless accounts for this. The relatively largest egg is laid by the kiwi, a strange, wingless New Zealand bird. The egg is no less than five inches long, although the extreme length of the bird itself is only twenty-seven inches.

Teaching Women Responsibility.

Princess Ingeborg, a member of the Swedish royal family, is among the most regular of the 800 women who have been attending the course of lectures given in Stockholm under the direction of the Swedish Women's National Suffrage association. The lectures are intended to prepare women for their new responsibilities under the new municipal law which makes them eligible as town and county councillors. Though the women of Sweden have long had the municipal vote, they are now for the first time eligible to office.

The total number of patents issued in all countries which thus protect their inventors from the earliest time to December 1, 1909, was 2,999,433.

SINGLE COMB RHODE ISLAND RED INDUSTRIOUS

There Is None Better for All-Purpose Fowl, Says Texas Poultry Fancier—Little Chicks Very Strong.

There is too little attention being paid to poultry on the farm. Poultry is as essential as horses, cows, hogs or any other farm stock. It seems to me that every farmer's wife would select some large breed of chickens and have a small flock to supply her table with nice fryers and fresh eggs all the year. There is none better than the Single Comb Rhode Island Red for an all purpose fowl.

They are very large and very industrious. Rhode Island Reds are up early every morning and go to roost late every evening. The little chicks are very strong from the time they leave the shell. They feather early and all poultry raisers know when a chick is feathered it is raised, writes K. C. Yelverton in Farm and Ranch. Chicks grow very fast and are large enough to eat when they are eight weeks old.

The pullets, when well cared for, lay at five months old. I have raised many of the so-called standard breeds, for instance, the Barred Plymouth Rocks, the Wyandottes, the Hamburgs, White Leghorns, Buff Cochins and others, and was always troubled more or less with various diseases among my chickens. I can truthfully say since I have been raising the Single Comb Rhode Island Reds I have never had any disease whatever among them.

The Single Comb Rhode Island Reds are very beautiful with their rich red plumage, well developed body and exquisitely bright eyes, which all goes to show they are the chickens for the men or woman who wants to make money with poultry. January, 1909, I had seven red hens and one cock. In that month the seven hens laid 109 eggs. In February my family was sick so much I could not keep a record of the eggs laid. But in March I was able to keep a record, and they laid 140 eggs, 11 dozen and eight eggs laid in March. I sold a good many eggs for hatching purposes, and sold some of the stock for breeders, and raised 40 fine pullets for my own use. Besides, we had all the fryers a family of four could eat all the year. I sold from those seven hens $46.25 in eggs and stock. I never got such results from any other chickens. This year I have two pens of fine red hens and two fine cocks.

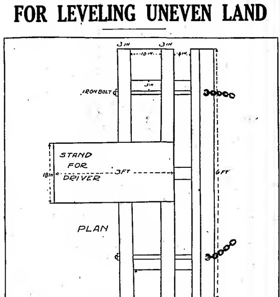
Killing Pocket Gophers.

The pocket gophers are quite easily killed with poisons. The United States department of agriculture gives the following formula for this: Dissolve one ounce of strychnia sulphate in a pint of boiling water. Add a pint of thick sugar sirup. Scent this mixture by adding a few drops of oil of anise. Steep a half bushel of corn in hot water and allow it to soak over night. After this, drain it, and allow to soak for several hours in the poisoned sirup.

Postage on Seeds.

The total weight of seeds sent by congressmen to their constituents through the mails in a single year is 1,350,000 pounds. If postage were paid on these seeds it would cost the congressmen a round million dollars.

FOR LEVELING UNEVEN LAND



A cheap and effective contrivance for leveling uneven land is shown in the accompanying illustration. The leveler may be made of any convenient length up to 12 feet; the steel smoothing plate is very light, but will last a long time. It is brought from the middle 3 inches by 2 inches beam to the underneath of the back 6 inches by 3 inches beam, and holes are cut in it for the ties and bolts. It is a flat steel sheet with ends turned one inch, and secured with one-inch screws. The cutter is shod with 2½-inch by 4½-inch steel plate, with beveled edge, secured with two-inch screws. The stand for the driver is of pine, 2 feet 9 inches by 1 foot 6 inches by 1½ inch. In use the driver standing on the plate, by moving forward causes the front beam with its cutting edge to enter the ground, and carry forward any soil cut off. By moving backward he raises the cutting edge, allowing the accumulated earth to pass under in as great or as little quantity as he pleases; while the sloping steel sheet smoothes it out, crushes the lumps and spreads it into any depressions.

Willing to Pay for Rammer.

When the British square at the battle of Abu Klea, in the Nubian desert, was penetrated by the dervishes, one of them attempted to spear a gunner who was in the act of ramming home a charge. The Briton brained the Sudanese, but the rammer head split on the man's hard skull. Next day the gunner was sent for. Mistaking the reason, and knowing from experience that soldiers are charged for government property which they break, he led off with: "Please, sir, I'm very sorry I broke the rammer, but I never thought the fellow's head could be so hard. I'll pay for the rammer so as to hear no more of the case."

The Valuable Match.

There was a loud splash, and a moment later a dripping head appeared above the waves. On the end of the dock was a stevedore nonchalantly lighting his pipe.

"Help, man!" cried the chap in the water. "Can't you see I am overboard? I can't swim."

"How often have you been down?" asked the stevedore, shielding the flickering match from the wind.

"Once, I believe, but hurry up, man! Give me a hand!"

"You wait! You have two more times yet to go down, and I have only one match. I'll catch you on the last trip."—Exchange.

Old Men in Responsibility.

The American business system, which gives mere boys responsible positions before they have acquired practical experience, is to an Englishman quite unaccountable. He wonders whether it does not cause reckless trading and wild speculation. In other countries they prefer to keep elderly men in responsible positions because they can be depended upon. Messrs. Dyke & Sons, Somerset, England, employ 66 men. More than half have completed 30 years' service, 20 have been there 40 years, nine over 50 years and one 70 years.

It Made No Difference.

Congressman Ransdell of Louisiana, recently told a story of Alec Trimble, the valet and factotum of a physician in New Orleans, who took a fancy to one of the summer shirts of his master, and finally went and bought one exactly like it. He showed it to his mistress, who said that he had done wrong, as the two shirts might get mixed in the washing; and Alec answered:

"It'd make no difference, missus, 'cause dey's both alike in size an' price."

The "back to the farm" movement is growing, but for every boy that desires to get back two more are trying to break away.

Former Governor Folk has announced his candidacy for president. We are waiting to hear from Mr. Bryan whether or not he will do before making further comment.

The laying of the cornerstone of the court house next Saturday marks an epoch in the history of Red Lake county, and likewise it sounds the death knell of rival county seat ambitions.

The Duluth News-Tribune asserts that when the railroads figure out a six per cent increase in operating expenses, they at once recoup with a ten per cent increase on freight charges. It is thus they spell finance.

A North Dakota man could not tell the name of the president of the United States. Mr. Taft gets so flustered occasionally though, that it is doubtful if he is in a better condition than the man from North Dakota.

Re-apportionment is the most urgent need of northern Minnesota, but it is doubtful if we can get it by assuming a belligrent attitude. Our hope lies in the possibility that the southern Minnesota legislators will recognize the spirit of justice and fair play.

An Oklahoma girl advertised for a husband and landed him, says an Iowa exchange. The entire cost for advertising and wedding was $11. One year later her husband died leaving her $10,000 insurance. And still there are some old fashioned people who will tell you that it does not pay to advertise.

In his speech on tariff, Champ Clark, of Missouri, declared that if President Taft had vetoed the Payne-Aldrich-Smoot bill, he could have wrote his name among the country's greatest benefactors. "But he let the golden opportunity go buy unimproved," added the minority leader, "and it will never return to him as long as the grass grows or water runs."

The Republican party could be of great service to the movement for a non partisan judiciary by nominating Judge Thomas D. O'Brien for re-election to the supreme bench. The Judge has made an enviable record and is recognized as an exceptionally able and conscientious jurist. No one can give a reason why he should be retired except that he belongs to the Democratic party.

There is a growing sentiment of the discontinuance of Decoration day and to substitute there for a Memorial Sunday. The fact that the day is not generally observed in the spirit and manner originally intended is the chief argument for the change. We are getting too many holidays anyway and perhaps the new arrangements will better serve the purpose of commemorating the heroism of the Union soldiery.

Congressman Hammond's position with reference to a permanent tariff commission is absolutely right, says the Sleepy Eye Herald-Dispatch. He says real revision will be indefinitely prolonged by a commission and congress can do that at its first session of the next congress. It is a remarkable thing to see the friends of protected interest shout for a commission just as if there is any danger of the people's taking a hand in remedying evils.

The National Bar Association and National civic federation joint committee on reform in legal procedure, have made the statement that "The system under which our law is administered is one hundred years behind the age: procedure in equity cases is a scandal to jurisprudence; many cases are decided not on merits but on purely technical questions; and not only has something got to be done but something will be done" Every thoughtful person will agree with this finding; and speed the day when something will be done.

Maybe the editor doesn't belong to your church or lodge or political party, but he is doing a lot more than you have dreamed of doing to keep your town on the map, says the Fairport Herald. And he can't paint it in glowing colors and buy Venetian red to do it with forever, unless he is a man of independent fortune. If he's the right sort he won't ask you to advertise or subscribe unless you get one hundred cents for a dollar, but he can sing the town's virtues in a much clearer tenor if his advertising columns are filled and some good citizens occasionally help him by writing a little for publication instead of telling him what to do.

LET US FORGET.

The Sons of Veterans at St. Paul have sent a petition to Washington protesting against the Lee statue in the national capitol. This would seem to be an ill-advised and ungenerous movement. In the first place the sovereign state of Vrignia has the right to choose its representatives for the hall of fame. General Robert E. Lee was a high type of American citizenship. True he was a Confederate general, but the northern people are not disposed at this distance from that unhappy period to question the motive that moved the Southern heart or to rekindle the flames of sectional strife.

Rather would we forget the wounds of war and do our part in securing closer bonds of sympathy and union.

Might not all of us profit by reading Max Ehrmann's recent poem:

"Let us forget the knife of war
That tore the tender flesh of youth,
Sent white haired men to ugly death,
And made the land a thing uncouth.
O blue, O gray; who long since met,
Let us forget, let us forget!
"No matter now which won or lost—
I say our country's traitor he
Who pricks afresh the healing scars
A brother's blood again to see.
On gray or blue grim victory set
By murder God let us forget!
"On every grave I drop a rose
Of love, and question not if gray
Or blue the sleeper be. My heart
With each lies buried there today.
And Memory sits with eyes all wet.
If blue or gray, let us forget."

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners,

S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE

It is a generally recognized fact that medicines taken from the botanical kingdom are better adapted to the delicate human system, and safer in every way, than those composed of strong mineral mixtures.

In the early settlement of this land, our forefathers were obliged to prepare their medicines from Nature's great laboratories of forest and field. They searched out and compounded the different vegetable materials into teas, concoctions and medicines. That these pioneers found the most potent and valuable of the roots, herbs and barks placed at their disposal, is abundantly proven by the fact that the great majority of them were blessed with rugged health. They cured their diseases and were enabled to do the great preliminary work of civilization because the remedies they used were Nature's remedies, and especially adapted to the needs of humanity.

Among the very best of these vegetable preparations is S. S. S., a medicine made entirely of roots, herbs and barks in such combination as to make it the greatest of all blood purifiers and the finest of all tonics. S. S. S. does not contain the least particle of mineral in any form, and is absolutely a safe medicine for any one to use.

CHEMIST FOUND S. S. S. FREE FROM MINERALS.

A few years ago I was taken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Upon the advice of a friend I decided to try S.S.S. Before allowing me to take it, however, my own friend, who was a chemist, analyzed the remedy, and pronounced it free from potash or mercury. I continued the remedy, and in two months I was cured completely. The cure was permanent, for I have never since had a touch of Rheumatism, though many times exposed to damp and cold weather.

MRS. ELEANOR T. JONES
53 Cliff St., Roxbury, Mass.

While purifying the blood this great vegetable remedy builds up and strengthens every portion of the system. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, Scrofula, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, hereditary taints, and all other diseases and disorders caused by impure or polluted blood.

As a tonic S. S. S. is unequaled. It invigorates every portion of the system, and the healthy blood it creates largely assists in overcoming any derangement of the digestive system. If you are suffering from any blood trouble, or need a tonic to build up your constitution, you could not do better than to take S. S. S., a medicine that is in no degree harmful. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

For the Critics.

Creston Clark, whose untimely death at Asheville robbed America of a serious and capable actor, was somewhat impatient of criticism. To a Philadelphia critic he once said:

"You critics are unwilling to accept a man for what he is. You want to change him to your own taste. But each of you has a different taste. To whose inclination, then, is he to bend?

"No, no! Take the artist for what he is. That is the right critical attitude. Don't be like the farm urchin I once saw—an urchin who, as he [illegible] a frog to death, repeated severely:

"'I'll l'arn ye to be a toad.'"

PRIZE IN A JUNGLE

Indiana Scientist Brings Back Strange Fish With Legs.

Dangers of All Kinds Are Braved by Hoosier in a Three-Year Trip Through South American Wilds—Tales of Hardship.

Bloomington, Ind.—In the midst of a mass of 30,000 specimens of fish life, now reposing in the preservative of the Carnegie institute of Pittsburg, is a specimen of animal life which is totally new to present-day scientists, according to a statement given out here by Dr. John D. Haseman, who has just returned after a three-years' trip through the wilds of South America in search of hitherto unknown forms of fish life.

Reticent in the extreme concerning his discovery, which, it is alleged, is the greatest in zoology since the days of Alexander Humboldt, Dr. Haseman would say only that the new species is about eighteen inches long, is blind and has 96 segments in its body.

Dr. Carl H. Eigenmann, head of Indiana zoological department, says that the specimen is neither a fish nor has it four legs. It is known, however, that the species has rudimentary legs, and closely resembles the American salamander. Only one specimen of the "find" is in the possession of the institute.

Speaking of his trip across the wilds of the Paraguay river, through the 2,000-mile stretch of the Amazon valley and into the unknown regions of the coastwise rivers of the southern continent, Dr. Haseman tells almost unbelievable stories of hardship and privation, hunger and disease suffered along with his handful of native guides in the pursuit of the various discoveries in the scientific world, which he says he will soon make public. Dr. Haseman was the only white man in the party.

After journeying almost 10,000 miles along the east coast of the continent, from Bahia to Buenos Ayres, making numerous side trips into the valleys of the coastwise rivers, the former Indiana university student started on a 10,000-mile trip through the very heart of the continent. He followed the Paraguay river from its mouth to the source, then made a 400-mile trip, which took 27 days, in order to get around an intervening range of mountains.

This side expedition was made in a bull cart. The explorer then found the source of the Gunpola river, traveled 1,500 miles down it to the Madeira river, then into the valley of the Amazon and down the valley of the "King of Rivers" to its outlet, a distance of more than 1,000 miles.

Most of the long journey was in boats, some of it was on foot, through almost impassable jungles, some of the way was negotiated on log rafts, and at times, when the rivers were dry, the native guides had to pull the boats over hidden rocks.

A close watch had to be kept and barricades built of the boats themselves to keep the Indian along the route from shooting into the party with poisoned arrows.

At times the food supply of the party ran out and they were forced to shoot monkeys for food. At other times a limited supply of dried fish formed the only sustenance of the entire party.

The specimen of the "fish with feet," which is the only one of its sort that scientists have been able to capture, and which is so highly prized that few hints of its true character have leaked out, was captured in the Rio Negro river, near its junction with the Amazon.

Doctor Haseman is the only other scientist besides Johann Netterer, a German naturalist, who undertook a similar expedition in 1825, who has made this South American trip. Netterer's specimens are now in the Vienna museum.

ONE LETTER COSTS FORTUNE

Visions of Vast Riches Disappear When New Jersey "Heir" Learns of Mistake.

Burlington, N. J.—William P. Stockley learned the other day that he missed by a mere letter becoming a millionaire. An industrious policeman with a description of a William Stockley, missing for several years from Wilmington, Del., found the local Stockley the other night and told him of his great luck.

Stockley once lived in Delaware and was having visions of a palace and automobiles while the authorities were endeavoring to connect with the executor of the estate from which the missing man will inherit more than $1,000,000 if found.

The answer from Delaware gave the full name of the missing man as William Brown Stockley. The middle initial of the local William is "P.," which does not stand for Brown, and he is now back on his job convinced that the fates had tricked him.

PURPURAEMORRHAGICA KILLS

English Jury Declares That Rare Malady Accelerated the Death of a Miner.

London.—A case of alleged purpuraemorrhagica—or black blister—was inquired into by the Walsall deputy coroner.

A man named Edward Booker, on arriving home from his work at the Holly Bank Colliery company's Sneyd pit, had a black eye and complained that a "tree" had flown out and hit him. Next day he developed black blisters in the mouth, which extended over his body and caused death.

Dr. Longmore stated that this was a disease called purpuraemorrhagica, which was so obscure that "Coates' Pathology," one of the best known pathological works, did not even mention it; and, further, that it was brought on by the blow.

The jury returned a verdict of death from purpuraemorrhagica, accelerated by injuries received while at work.

German Dress Is Criticized

Reputation for Simplicity Compared Unfavorably With Other Nations—Faith in Silk.

Berlin.—The reputation of the German woman for simplicity of living and dressing has caused her to be compared unfavorably with her sisters of Paris, New York and London. There is general agreement that she has deserved her reputation, but there is no less general agreement that of late years she has changed her standard of dress and has become more ambitious.

A critic who has recently been studying dress in Berlin still finds much to be dissatisfied with. The progress is not inclusive enough. Women in the upper classes have vastly improved in their knowledge of dress and the application of their knowledge with elegance and taste.

Actresses are now costumed in a way that makes the German street scene far more attractive and pleasing than it was a dozen years ago. But there is an enormous number of women who recognize taste and elegance when they see such qualities in feminine costumes, but from motives of tradition and economy, chiefly the latter, steadily refuse to change their fashion of attire.

These women, in age from forty to sixty, usually pin their faith to silk, and the older the silk is the better. It is this clinging to tradition that gives so many theater audiences in Germany their look of commonplaceness, not to say untidiness. This class of German woman, the critic says, is almost equally criminal in her attitude toward the crown of a woman's getup, the hat.

WHOLE SHIP CARGO WEIGHED

Porphydrometed Registers as Passenger Come Aboard or Leaves—Detects Leaks.

London.—An ingenious little instrument which weighs the whole cargo of a ship at one operation and records the change in the vessel's weight when a passenger steps on or off, has been tested on a 200 ton barge off the Temple pier, London. Its name is the porphydrometer. The instrument is based on the infallible principle that a body floating in a liquid of whatever density displaces a quantity of that liquid exactly equal to its own weight, and by its application a vessel is transformed into a gigantic weighbridge, or weighing machine. The porphydrometer will be of immense value in minimizing the danger from leaks on vessels, for attached to the instrument is an electric bell which gives warning should a leak occur.

Mere Man Outbid by Woman

Los Angeles Widow Wins Yuma Farm From Wyoming Man at Recent Auction Sale.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Outbid by a woman. This was the experience of Edward B. Milner from the plains of Wyoming, in the contest for Yuma farm unit O 33, which was auctioned at the United States land office.

Mrs. Mary E. Delo, widow, residing in this city, was the woman who refused to be outdone by a mere man.

The price paid was $201.

The land for which Mrs. Delo and Mr. Midner were bidding was a farm unit which went by default, the successful applicant in the drawing having failed to make the first payment within the ten-day period.

When Receiver Robinson offered this strip of land at auction a contest for the farm was begun.

It did not require the perception of a sage to see that the land was wanted by both Mr. Milner and Mrs. Delo.

As quickly as one bid, the price was raised by the other contestant for the farm. Rapidly the price was bid up to $100, and then increased steadily until it had soared to $200. At this figure a friend of Milner persuaded him to withdraw from the bidding, and no person seemed willing to raise the price of $201 bid by Mrs. Delo.

Receiver Robinson declared that Mrs. Delo had purchased the first right to file an entry on farm unit G 33 of the Yuma land project for $201. In addition to this amount, it will be necessary for Mrs. Delo to pay the regular government price of $65 an acre.

Defeated in this quarter, but determined to have a Yuma farm, Mr. Milner studied the blue print showing the location of the various units, and selected a section which had been allowed to go by default by the original applicant, and filed an entry on it without paying any money except the regulation price of $65 an acre.

It was farm unit C 33, and Mrs. Delo and Mr. Milner will be near neighbors.

Easy Victory.

"Life," said the idealist, "should be a generous rivalry in kindness and self-sacrifice." "Yes," replied Mr. Sinnick; "but in that kind of a contest there are too many people willing to let you win hands down."

THIS DOG CAN COUNT HOURS

Acts as Alarm Clock for Early-Rising New Jersey Farmer—Wants His Breakfast.

Beverly, N. J.—Promptly at 4:30 o'clock every morning John Paesner, a farmer, arises and begins his day's work. He does not bother about alarm clocks any more, for he places more reliance in his hound dog Spot, who sleeps outdoors and who a few minutes before 4:30 begins an unearthly howl.

Paesner knows from experience it is useless to try to prolong his sleep, for the dog's yelps will not cease until his master comes down to him.

Paesner gives a simple explanation of how the dog became such a reliable alarm. When he used the clock the first thing he would do after getting up would be to see if Spot was all right and throw him a piece of meat. The dog now looks for his breakfast at that hour, and for three months has not varied five minutes in time.

Family Cat Catches Mumps

Animal Now at Large and Health Authorities Fear Epidemic Among Tabbies of City.

Norwood, Pa.—Mumps have become such an epidemic in this borough that the authorities are trying to locate a family pet in the shape of a large cat, with wide stripes around its body, the pet of a family where the mumps had prevailed, and the recipient of the milk and toast that the patient would not eat. The result is that the cat has the mumps, and is now running at large.

For several days the board of health inspector has tried hard to catch that cat. He said he did get a look at him, and he was the greatest sight a man ever saw—a cat with a couple of good-sized hickory nuts, one on each of its jowls, and sitting on a fence, emitting unearthly screeches. He tried to move toward him slowly and carefully, but the cat saw him, and was off like a streak.

One of the leading physicians in the borough said that such a thing was possible as a cat having the mumps, although it might not be known as that, and there was danger of other domestic pets catching the disease. The inspector says he is going to keep on the job until that cat is in his net, and in the meantime he suggests to pet owners that they keep their animals at home.

Our Foreign Trade Booming.

Washington.—Foreign trade of the United States is booming. Going and coming large increases are apparent in a summary of the export and import trade for March alone and the nine months ended with March, just compiled by the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor. Imports of raw materials have grown largely and the exports of manufactures from these same raw materials has also increased.

There were more than a billion dollars' worth of imports during the nine months ended with March.

A Few Salads.

A salad is one of the most appetizing of dishes and one should never consider the preparation of a salad as too much trouble.

A salad should be simple and may be prepared in a very few moments. One of these dishes is:

Strawberry Salad.—Take the heart leaves of lettuce, heap a few ripe strawberries in each, dust with powdered sugar. On each portion place a teaspoonful of mayonnaise and a piece of lemon.

Grape Fruit and Cherry Salad.—Cut the grape fruit through the center, removing the sections and freeing them of the white fiber. Marinate in a little French dressing of three tablespoonfuls of oil, one of vinegar and salt and pepper to taste. Place some of the grape fruit on heart leaves of head lettuce, on these nests add enough cherries to make an attractive salad.

Spanish Salad.—Cut in halves several hard cooked eggs, and place them at intervals on the lettuce in a salad bowl or plate. Between the eggs lay stuffed olives and halves of tomatoes. Cover each egg with mayonnaise, and serve each guest with each of the ingredients of the salad.

Fish Filets.—Cut the large filets into three smaller ones, dip in flour, season with salt and red pepper. Place a nest in the meat and on this place strips of salt pork and sliced onion, then lay on the filets. On each place a bit of pork and onion, and cover closely and bake until well done. Serve with a white sauce in which chopped parsley and sour pickle is added.

Grape Juice Soup.—Cook half a cupful of tapioca until soft, with a pint of water. Add three pieces of stick cinnamon. Strain and add one cupful of grape juice. Sweeten to taste and serve hot.

"As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his bed."

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Eggs.

Eggs are now becoming reasonable in price so that the frugal housewife may feel that she can use them more plentifully. They may often take the place of meat in a meal, especially for a breakfast, luncheon or supper dish.

When making angel food the yolks may be used for any number of dishes. A salad dressing, or a gold cake will use most of the yolks. Beat the yolks left from the angel cake, add a little cream or milk and salt, then turn into a hot buttered omelet pan and stir constantly until all cooked. Serve as a supper or breakfast dish. If more cream is added the egg may be served on toast.

For a simple little luncheon dessert there is nothing daintier than a plain omelet spread with apple jelly, which has been heated in hot water to soften. Fold and cut in slices. It tastes very good and looks even prettier than it tastes.

Save the egg shells (washing the egg before breaking), and use them to settle the coffee.

Breakfast Eggs.—Put six eggs into a vessel which will hold five pints. Pour over boiling water to fill the dish, cover closely and set on the back part of the stove or the rack to cook. Leave seven minutes for a soft cooked egg, ten for a medium cooked, fifteen for a firm and thirty for a hard cooked egg.

Qualifications of Maids of Honor.

A girl who aspires to become a maid of honor intimates, usually through her parents, to the mistress of the robes that she would like to serve her majesty in this capacity, and if she is a suitable candidate her name is put down and submitted to the queen when a vacancy among the maids of honor occurs, or in the event of her majesty wishing to increase the number, which is at present limited to three.

A maid of honor must of course occupy a well established social position, though it is now not necessary, as it was once, that they should be of titled rank. A maid must be able to speak French fluently and should be able to converse in German; she must be a good pianist, and be able to read accompaniments at sight, and she must, it is scarcely necessary to say, be thoroughly well educated and have traveled on the continent. A good well trained voice is a qualification.—Gentlewoman.

New Work for Women.

Mrs. Frederick H. Snyder is the only woman impressario on earth, she says. She decided that grand opera would be a good thing for St. Paul and made her first venture so successful that she has continued in the business after the fashion of men engaged in the same work.

The candle of contentment is not necessarily better than the lamp of learning.

People seem to have a mania for touching a man on his sore spots.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

She was a fisherman's daughter, she wore her hair in a net, and she preferred love in a piscatorial way.

"My love," he whispered, "you hold first place in my heart! Although I flounder about in expressing myself, my only wish is that you will save me from becoming a 'crabbed' old bachelor. I shall stick to you closer than a limpet, from you a 'wink'll' be the road to gubble me. Together we will 'skate' over life's 'rocks,' and when I look at your hand beside me I will say to myself: 'Fortune was mine when I put 'herring' there!"

And then the lady dropped her eyes in sweet confusion, and murmured: "Pass the salt."

A Quick Cat.

Some years ago the proprietor of a hotel in southern New Hampshire told the following story. He said that when he was a boy he had occasion to go into the garret of his house one evening and that the family cat followed him up the stairs. One of the windows was open, and when they entered the garret a frightened mouse leaped out of the window, and the cat, jumping after it, caught it in midair and, whirling round, jumped back again into the same window.

And I believe I heard the joy-rider say, as he passed: "Oh, you kid witch!"

THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY BOBBS-MERRILL CO.

SYNOPSIS.

Miss Innes, spinster and guardian of Gertrude and Halsey, established summer headquarters at Sunnyside. Amidst numerous difficulties the servants deserted. As Miss Innes locked up for the night, she was startled by a dark figure on the veranda. She passed a terrible night, which was filled with unseemly noises.

CHAPTER II.—Continued.

"There's going to be a death!" she wailed. "Oh, Miss Rachel, there's going to be a death!"

"There will be," I said grimly, "if you don't keep quiet, Liddy Allen."

And so we sat there until morning, wondering if the candle would last until dawn, and arranging what trains we could take back to town. If we had only stuck to that decision and gone back before it was too late!

The sun came finally, and from my window I watched the trees along the drive take shadowy form, gradually lose their ghostlike appearance, become gray and then green. The Greenwood club showed itself a dab of white against the hill across the valley, and an early robin or two hopped around in the dew. Not until the milk-boy and the sun came, about the same time, did I dare to open the door into the hall and look around. Everything was as we had left it. Trunks were heaped here and there, ready for the trunk room, and through the end window of stained glass came a streak of red and yellow daylight that was eminently cheerful. The milk-boy was pounding somewhere below, and the day had begun.

Thomas Johnson came ambling up the drive about half-past six, and we could hear him clattering around on the lower floor, opening shutters. I had to take Liddy to her room upstairs, however—she was quite sure she would find something uncanny. In fact, when she did not, having now the courage of daylight, she was actually disappointed.

Well, we did not go back to town that day.

I warned Liddy not to mention what had happened to anybody, and telephoned to town for servants. Then, after a breakfast which did more credit to Thomas' heart than his head, I went on a short tour of investigation. The sounds had come from the east wing, and not without some qualms I began there. At first I found nothing. Since then I have developed my powers of observation, but at that time I was a novice. The small card-room seemed undisturbed. I looked for footprints, which is, I believe, the conventional thing to do, although my experience has been that as clews both footprints and thumb-marks are more useful in fiction than in fact. But the stairs in that wing offered something.

At the top of the flight had been placed a tall wicker hamper packed with linen that had come from town. It stood at the edge of the top step, almost barring passage, and on the step below it was a long, fresh scratch. For three steps the scratch was repeated, gradually diminishing, as if some object had fallen, striking each one. Then for four steps nothing. On the fifth step below was a round dent in the hard wood. That was all, and it seemed little enough, except that I was positive the marks had not been there the day before.

It bore out my theory of the sound, which had been for all the world like the bumping of a metallic object down a flight of steps. The four steps had been skipped. I reasoned that an iron bar, for instance, would do something of the sort—strike two or three steps, end down, then turn over, jumping a few stairs, and landing with a thud.

Iron bars, however, do not fall down-stairs in the middle of the night alone. Coupled with the figure on the veranda the agency by which it climbed might be assumed. But—and here was the thing that puzzled me most—the doors were all fastened that morning, the windows unmolested, and the particular door from the card room to the veranda had a combination lock of which I held the key, and which had not been tampered with.

I fixed on an attempt at burglary, as the most natural explanation—an attempt frustrated by the falling of the object, whatever it was, that had roused me. Two things I could not understand; how the intruder had escaped with everything locked, and why he had left the small silver, which, in the absence of a butler, had remained downstairs over night.

In the afternoon a hack came up from Casanova, with a fresh relay of servants. The driver took them with a flourish to the servants' entrance, and drove around to the front of the house, where I was awaiting him.

"Two dollars," he said in reply to my question. "I don't charge full rates, because, bringin' 'em up all summer as I do, it pays to make a special price. When they got off the train I sez, sez I: 'There's another bunch for Sunnyside, cook, parlor maid and all.' Yes'm—six summers, and a new lot never less than once a month. They won't stand for the country and the lonesomeness, I reckon."

But with the presence of the "bunch" of servants my courage revived, and late in the afternoon came a message from Gertrude that she and Halsey would arrive that night at about 11 o'clock, coming in the car from Richfield. Things were looking up; and when Beulah, my cat, a most intelligent animal, found some early catnip on a bank near the house and rolled in it in a feline ecstasy, I decided that getting back to nature was the thing to do.

While I was dressing for dinner, Liddy rapped at the door. She was hardly herself yet, but privately I think she was worrying about the broken mirror and its augury, more than anything else. When she came in she was holding something in her hand, and she laid it on the dressing table carefully.

"I Was Roused by a Revolver Shot."

"I found it in the linen hamper," she said. "It must be Mr. Halsey's, but it seems queer how it got there."

It was the half of a link cuff button of unique design, and I looked at it carefully.

"Where was it? In the bottom of the hamper?" I asked.

"On the very top," she replied. "It's a mercy it didn't fall out on the way."

When Liddy had gone I examined the fragment attentively. I had never seen it before, and I was certain it was not Halsey's. It was of Italian workmanship, and consisted of a mother-of-pearl foundation, encrusted with tiny seed-pearls, strung on horsehair to hold them. In the center was a small ruby. The trinket was odd enough, but not intrinsically of great value. Its interest for me lay in this: Liddy had found it lying in the top of the hamper which had blocked the east-wing stairs.

That afternoon the Armstrongs' housekeeper, a youngish good-looking woman, applied for Mrs. Ralston's place, and I was glad enough to take her. She looked as though she might be equal to a dozen of Liddy, with her snapping black eyes and heavy jaw. Her name was Anne Watson, and I dined that evening for the first time in three days.

CHAPTER III.

Mr. John Bailey Appears.

I had dinner served in the breakfast room. Somehow the huge dining room depressed me, and Thomas, cheerful enough all day, allowed his spirits to go down with the sun. He had a habit of watching the corners of the room, left shadowy by the candles on the table, and altogether it was not a festive meal.

Dinner over I went into the living room. I had three hours before the children could possibly arrive, and I got out my knitting.

The chug of the automobile as it climbed the hill was the most welcome sound I had heard for a long time, and with Gertrude and Halsey actually before me, my troubles seemed over for good. Gertrude stood smiling in the hall, with her hat quite over one ear, and her hair in every direction under her pink veil. Gertrude is a very pretty girl, no matter how her hat is, and I was not surprised when Halsey presented a good-looking young man, who bowed at me and looked at Trude—that is the ridiculous nickname Gertrude brought from school.

"I have brought a guest, Aunt Ray," Halsey said. "I want you to adopt him into your affections and your Saturday-to-Monday list. Let me present John Bailey, only you must call him Jack. In 12 hours he'll be calling you 'Aunt'; I know him."

We shook hands, and I got a chance to look at Mr. Bailey; he was a tall fellow, perhaps 30, and he wore a small mustache. I remember wondering why; he seemed to have a good mouth and when he smiled his teeth were above the average. One never knows why certain men cling to a messy upper lip that must get into things, any more than one understands some women building up their hair on wire atrocities. Otherwise, he was very good to look at, stalwart and tanned, with the direct gaze that I like. I am particular about Mr. Bailey, because he was a prominent figure in what happened later.

Gertrude was tired with the trip and went up to bed very soon. I made up my mind to tell them nothing until the next day, and then to make as light of our excitement as possible. After all, what had I to tell? An inquisitive face peering in at a window; a crash in the night; a scratch or two on the stairs, and half a cuff-button! As for Thomas and his forebodings, it was always my belief that a negro is one part thief, one part pigment, and the rest superstition.

It was Saturday night. The two men went to the billiard room, and I could hear them talking as I went upstairs. It seemed that Halsey had stopped at the Greenwood club for gasolene and found Jack Bailey there, with the Sunday golf crowd. Mr. Bailey had not been hard to persuade—probably Gertrude knew why—and they had corralled him off triumphantly. I roused Liddy to get them something to eat—Thomas was beyond reach in the lodge—and paid no attention to her evident terror of the kitchen regions. Then I went to bed. The men were still in the billiard room when I finally dozed off, and the last thing I remember was the howl of a dog in front of the house. It wailed a crescendo of woe that trailed off hopefully, only to break out afresh from a new point of the compass.

At three o'clock in the morning I was roused by a revolver shot. The sound seemed to come from just outside my door. For a moment I could not move. Then—I heard Gertrude stirring in her room, and the next moment she had thrown open the connecting door.

"O, Aunt Ray! Aunt Ray!" she cried hysterically. "Some one has been killed!"

"Thieves," I said shortly. "Thank goodness, there are some men in the house to-night." I was getting into my slippers and a bath-robe, and Gertrude with shaking hands was lighting a lamp. Then we opened the door into the hall, where, crowded on the upper landing of the stairs, the maids, white-faced and trembling, were peering down, headed by Liddy. I was greeted by a series of low screams and questions, and I tried to quiet them. Gertrude had dropped on a chair and sat there limp and shivering.

I went at once across the hall to Halsey's room and knocked; then I pushed the door open. It was empty; the bed had not been occupied!

"He must be in Mr. Bailey's room," I said excitedly, and followed by Liddy, we went there. Like Halsey's, it had not been occupied! Gertrude was on her feet now, but she leaned against the door for support.

"They have been killed!" she gasped. Then she caught me by the arm and dragged me toward the stairs. "They may only be hurt, and we must find them," she said, her eyes dilated with excitement.

I don't remember how we got down the stairs; I do remember expecting every moment to be killed. The cook was at the telephone upstairs, calling the Greenwood club, and Liddy was behind me, afraid to come and not daring to stay behind. We found the living room and the drawing room undisturbed. Somehow I felt that whatever we found would be in the card-room or on the staircase, and nothing but the fear that Halsey was in danger drove me on; with every step my knees seemed to give way under me. Gertrude was ahead and in the card-room she stopped, holding her candle high. Then she pointed silently to the doorway into the hall beyond. Huddled there on the floor, face down, with his arms extended, was a man.

Gertrude ran forward with a gasping sob. "Jack," she cried, "Oh, Jack!"

Liddy had run, screaming, and the two of us were there alone. It was Gertrude who turned him over, finally, until we could see his white face, and then she drew a deep breath and dropped limply to her knees. It was the body of a man, a gentleman, in a dinner coat and white waistcoat, stained now with blood—the body of a man I had never seen before.

CHAPTER IV.

Where Is Halsey?

Gertrude gazed at the face in a kind of fascination. Then she put out her hands blindly, and I thought she was going to faint.

"He has killed him!" she muttered almost inarticulately; and at that, because my nerves were going, I gave her a good shake.

"What do you mean?" I said frantically. There was a depth of grief and conviction in her tone that was worse than anything she could have said. The shake braced her, anyhow, and she seemed to pull herself together. But not another word would she say; she stood gazing down at that gruesome figure on the floor, while Liddy, ashamed of her flight and afraid to come back, drove before her three terrified women servants into the drawing room, which was as near as any of them would venture.

Once in the drawing room, Gertrude collapsed and went from one fainting spell into another. I had all I could do to keep Liddy from drowning her with cold water, and the maids huddled in a corner, as much use as so many sheep. In a short time, although it seemed hours, a car came rushing up, and Anne Watson, who had waited to dress, opened the door. Three men from the Greenwood club, in all kinds of costumes, hurried in. I recognized a Mr. Jarvis, but the others were strangers.

"What's wrong?" the Jarvis man asked—and we made a strange picture, no doubt. "Nobody hurt, is there?" He was looking at Gertrude.

"Worse than that, Mr. Jarvis," I said. "I think it is murder."

At the word there was a commotion. The cook began to cry, and Mrs. Watson knocked over a chair. The men were visibly impressed.

"Not any member of the family?" Mr. Jarvis asked, when he had got his breath.

"No," I said; and motioning Liddy to look after Gertrude, I led the way with a lamp to the cardroom door. One of the men gave an exclamation, and they all hurried across the room. Mr. Jarvis took the lamp from me—I remember that—and then feeling myself getting dizzy and light-headed I closed my eyes. When I opened them their brief examination was over, and Mr. Jarvis was trying to put me in a chair.

"You must get upstairs," he said firmly, "you and Miss Gertrude, too. This has been a terrible shock. In his own home, too."

I stared at him without comprehension. "Who is it?" I asked with difficulty. There seemed a hand drawn tight around my throat.

"It is Arnold Armstrong," he said, looking at me oddly, "and he has been murdered—in his father's house."

After a minute I gathered myself together and Mr. Jarvis helped me into the living room. Liddy had got Gertrude upstairs, and the two strange men from the club stayed with the body. The reaction from the shock and strain was tremendous; I was collapsed—and then Mr. Jarvis asked me a question that brought back my wandering faculties.

"Where is Halsey?" he asked.

"Halsey!" Suddenly Gertrude's stricken face rose before me—the empty room upstairs. Where was Halsey?

"He was here, wasn't he?" Mr. Jarvis persisted. "He stopped at the club on his way over."

"I—don't know where he is," I said feebly.

One of the men from the club came in, asked for the telephone, and I could hear him excitedly talking, saying something about coroners and detectives. Mr. Jarvis leaned over to me.

"Why don't you trust me, Miss Innes?" he said. "If I can do anything I will. But tell me the whole thing."

I did, finally, from the beginning, and when I told of Jack Bailey's being in the house that night he gave a long whistle.

"I wish they were both here," he said when I finished. "Whatever mad prank took them away, it would look better if they were here. Especially—"

Fair Exchange No Robbery

Rumania Gets Our Sweet Corn and Gives to Us Her Little Melons.

America's sweet corn has been traded for Rumania's little watermelons. Horace G. Knowles, ex-American minister to Rumania, who is soon to start for his new post as minister to Nicaragua, consummated the transaction in the interest of good living.

When Mr. Knowles found the melon, about the size of a grapefruit, growing in the Carpathian foothills, he realized that it would be just the thing to serve individually in America. He obtained a quantity of the seed and transmitted it to the department of agriculture. The little melons have been cultivated with success at the government experiment stations in those regions where huge American melons are grown.

Having gained this desirable delicacy from Rumania, Mr. Knowles was anxious to repay the gift. He noticed that the people were utter strangers to sweet corn. Accordingly he obtained seed for this product from the department of agriculture, hired several plots of ground himself, and instructed the Rumanians in its culture.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Editor C. R. C. Baker left Tuesday evening for a ten days visit at his home in Brownton. Of late Mr. Baker's attentions have been seriously directed towards the North Side, and though no signs have been apparent during the daytime, residents of that section of town have been awakened at all times during the night, by the sounds of boxes being torn open, of pounding, and of noises attendant on the moving of furniture. And all this has occured in the Rogers house, but as the office "devil" has not been informed as to the true nature of the case, he is not able to say fully what it all means. Of course, if you have an idea, don't change your mind until you are forced to. It may be possible to say more regarding it next week, but until then, it is hoped that—well, it is hoped, anyway.

One Best Bank

We refer, of course, to this one, and knowing the superior facilities we have to offer, we unhesitatingly make the statement that every man, woman and child in this community who has anything to do with money should have an account with us. Certainly a modest statement, you say, and we agree with you because we know of no legitimate argument against it. Let us analyze a little and see where we are. No better set of officers and directors could be assembled than are in charge of this bank's affairs. All men of highest standing, all financially responsible, all men whose word and bond possess equal value. Nothing that could be offered you in any financial institution in America is lacking here, because dollar for dollar no bank anywhere is any safer than ours. We solicit business on our merit and large capital and surplus, and can offer you value received every time. If you have not already done so we ask you to establish relations with this bank now and we are very sure that they will be long continued.

First State Bank, Red Lake Falls

lieutenant governers' office is the logical candidate to succeed himself. It's plain as a pikestaff that that's the way Stephens has it figured out.

Kickers Kicking.

To be sure there are those always ready to spoil sport, and a series of recent interviews indicate that the kicker is still in evidence. He wants to retire certain spavined and ringboned wheel horses and harness up the promising colts. Thus we have the suggestion that young Dickson, whose brilliant management of Mayor Keller's campaign has brought him into prominent notice, should be given a chance to show what he could do in a larger field. Dickson is from Northfield, which already is somewhat noted in the political history of the state. He's a clean-cut able chap, without a checkered past. He has no political or other affiliations to bring reproach upon him. The younger Republicans are mostly Dickson men. However, the party doesn't appear to be ready yet for a new deal. Everything indicates that this year the old guard will again be entrusted with the direction of the campaign, and it's probably to late now to make a change. They are confident of victory. So were the other old guards—before Waterloo.

Local Scraps.

One reason, of course, why Smith is put forward so prominently is that it may become necessary to take care of him as Carl Wallace is after his scalp and may be able to capture his place in the senate. There is method, too, in Stephens assuming the aggressive at this time. He himself locally is in need of the prestige associated with the confidence of the state executive which he takes pains to advertise. Pains are being taken to make it plain in the Ninth congressional district and especially in Polk county that if Eberhart is elected governor, Stephens will be given a bunch of plums to distribute. Why? The reason is plain. There are a lot of people up there who have "vagaries." It used to be the hotbed of Populism. The woods are full of county optionists. The tonnage tax has all kinds of advocates. These people with vagaries are getting together. Clearly they can have no use for Stephens who has no vagaries, indeed is impatient of them. They want someone else in the senate instead of Stephens. They think they've found a man who can beat him. They've picked out John Sangstad for the job. John don't put on many frills. He don't pretend to know the political game as well as Stephens does. He has served two terms in the house and made two campaigns—the last one a strenuous one, especially in the primaries. Then the Stephens outfit was against him. He won out. The proposition now is that Saugstad shall try conclusions with Stephens himself, and there are those who predict that in that campaign Stephens will need to be busy every minute and will want all the pressure the governor can bring to bear in his behalf.

The Man From Walker.

Pat McGarry was down this week from Walker as smiling and confident as ever. He keeps hammering away at Lindberg in the Sixth district and appears to be quite satisfied with the progress he is making. "They tell me," he said, "that the Lindberg people talk of my candidacy up there as a good joke. Well, I want them to keep thinking that way. You remember I came down here not long ago after a normal school for Cass Lake. That made people smile. It was a joke they said. Well, I let them have their fun while I kept on sawing wood. I've been all over the district. I've been over parts of it two or three times. I ain't claiming anything, but you know me. The man who laughs best laughs last."

Democrats on Deck.

Curiously enough it wasn't only Republican politics that were on tap up at Crookston. Some Democrats casually appeared on the scene. First it was Senator Works from Blue Earth, Eberhart's county. "My county," he said "will come to the state convention instructed for John Lind." Works isn't given to talking through his hat and don't go off at half cock. When Works begins to talk John Lind it's a pretty good guess that he's got the tip that it's the thing to do and that Mr. Lind will take no offense. Reports from the northern counties which have been visited indicated that there is nothing doing but Lind. Western Minnesota Democrats are all for Lind. In St. Paul and Minneaplis the talk is all for Lind. That's the way they're talking up to Crookston. There seems to be method in it. Men are talking who are not accustomed to talk idly. Mr. Lind, to be sure, isn't saying a word. Why should he? But he knows as well as anyone what's going on, and it's a safe bet it wouldn't be going on if he put his foot down. It's a safe bet, too, that if the Democratic leaders were making any mistake, he would be fair enough with them at least to give them a hint that it's no use.

CORNER STONE IS SET IN POSITION

The Corner Stone of County's Court House Laid With Solemn Ceremony.

The Representative Tax Payers Present are Well Pleased With New Building.

Last Saturday afternoon in the presence of twelve hundred to fifteen hundred people gathered from all parts of the county the corner stone of the new court house was laid, after a very entertaining program had been carried out.

Dr N M Watson acted as the chairman of the occasion, welcomed the people who attended with very appropriate remarks, thanking the people from the different parts of the county who were present for their interest in the welfare of Red Lake county, and reminding them that as soon as the court house under construction would be completed that records and other property of the county would be safely housed in a suitable building thus protecting the property of all the people of the county.

Rev Hughes delivered the invocation for the occasion and his remarks fitted nicely into the program.

After the invocation a brief history of Red Lake county prepared by a committee appointed by the board of county commissioners was read, and contained some pertinent facts relative to this county in short it recited that in the year 1858 the state of Minnesota was admitted into the Union as a sister state, and that in July of the same year the county of Polk was established, which embraced all the territory in the present counties of Polk, Norman, Red Lake, Mahnomen and some townships which are now a part of the counties of Clay, Clearwater and Becker.

At that time a greater part of what was then Polk county was an Indian reservation, and it was not until the month of October, 1863, a treaty was concluded at the old crossing of the Red Lake river, about eight miles west of Red Lake Falls, in the township of Louisville, by Alexander Ramsey and Ashley C. Morrill and the chiefs and head men of the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians whereby only eleven townships of Indian reservation remained in what was then Polk county. The county of Red Lake was established by the issuance of a proclamation of Governor David M. Clough, bearing date the 24th dey of December, 1896.

The history names down to and including the present incumbents, and recites the wonderful growth and advancement of Red Lake county since its birth.

The reading of the history was followed by an oration of the day delivered by Dr. I. Lemieux who certainly did himself proud. The genial doctor kept the vast crowd in continuous uproar during nearly the entire time he spoke with his story telling and quaint sayings, he then turned to the serious phase of his subject, and discussed at length the origin, custom and object of the ceremony of laying corner stones in all public buildings following its history back to the dawn of civilization, and when the speaker had finished, his audience bursted into applause which lasted for several minutes.

The history of Red Lake county, some coins, relics, etc., were collected from those present and were deposited in the metallic box by the mayor of the city, John A. Duffy, who sealed it and deposited it in its proper receptacle in the corner stone.

The board of county commissioners acting as master of ceremonios then proceeded to lay the corner stone, and Simon Paul, an old soldier handled the trowel which firmly cemented the stone to its final resting place.

The entire program was interspered with sweet strains of music furnished by the Red Lake Falls Concert Band.

At the close of the program Wm. H. Krueger hoisted the Star and Stripes over the stone and the audience all joined in singing" America."

Every one who attended proclaimed that the laying of the corner stone of the new court house to be an occasion long to be remember.

Just Another Ball Game.

The ball game at Thief River Falls last Sunday was noted chiefly for the length of time taken to finish the game and that nearly every individual member of both contending teams seemed to feel, at least judging by results, that he must contribute all the errors possible. "Just a comedy of errors" would be more appropriate than to call it a ball game. The score at the close of the second inning, after about an hour and a half's play, stood 7 to 1 in favor of our boys. Tudie Garcean who pitched for our team, had the misfortune to turn his ankle early in the game. It took over three hours to play the entire nine innings and the final score was 23 to 10 in favor of the Thief River Falls team.

Theodore Ducharme, one of the tonsorial artists in the employ of E. A. Nelson was at Burnesville the latter part of last week.

The junior member of the firm, C. R. C. Baker is absent this week, that is a certainty, the rest is not so easy to follow. He has rented a house and garden on the north side, has house well filled with furniture and has some garden truck planted. Neighbors report that lights have been seen and hammering heard at all time of the night. Further his trunk, that ever since his advent to our city has occupied a niche in the Gazette office, has been removed and while direct evidence is lacking yet it is a fair inference to presume that the said trunk is now in the parlor of the house on the hill. There is a persistent rumor going around to the effect that he is contemplating matrimony, but even in the face of the foregoing it is hard to believe inasmuch as no word has reached this office to that effect. It hardly seems that he would forget the fact that the paper wants all the news all the time.

Circumstential evidence is pretty strong and all tends to but one conclusion but judgment will not be passed at this time, the defense, if any will be expected in next week's issue.

Proposals Wanted.

MEETING CLOSES

UPPER MINNESOTA BOOSTERS TO STICK TO REAPPORTIONMENT UNTIL THEY WIN.

NEXT MEET IN BRAINERD

System of Township Schools and New Land Laws Are Resolved Upon. One-Mill Tax for Good Roads Is Requested.

Strong resolutions were adopted by the Northern Minnesota Development association at the afternoon session Friday. They include:

A demand for reapportionment at the next session of the legislature.

A 1-mill state tax for good roads and employment of good roads experts.

A correction of alleged evils in the administration of state lands.

An appropriation of $100,000 for the board of immigration.

Establishment of a system of township rural schools and modification of the present school system so as to provide for their co-ordination with other institutions of learning.

Crookston, Minnesota. — The Northern Minnesota Development association has said its last word. The resolutions score the state land policy and make an appeal for reapportionment. The demand for reapportionment comes first in the resolutions, as the people of this section believe that their future development and fair treatment rests, above all else, on this. But the state land policy is criticized more mildly than it would have been had it not been feared that political color would be given to the expression of the association.

As it is, the paragraph expressing a demand for a change in the state land policy is in substance as outlined by Robert J. Wells, candidate for state auditor in an interview recently given to the public.

Conservative Counsel Prevails.

There were men on the committee hostile to State Auditor Iverson. There was a disposition to make the expression stronger but more conservative counsel prevailed and the chapter was modified. Auditor Iverson had arrived on the ground and it is possible that the activities of himself and of his friends had something to do with toning down the resolutions relative to the land policy.

The suggestion that mineral rights be reserved to the buyer of lands was made, but turned down, even though accompanied by the suggestion of the accompaniment of a 25-cent royalty.

In view of the bar of the constitution to securing what northern Minnesota thinks she wants, F. E. McPartlin of International Falls, came forward with the suggestion of a legislational convention, but this was turned down on the ground that northern Minnesota would not be ready for a legislational convention until it had secured reapportionment. It is proposed to have a constitutional amendment placed before the people with a view of securing a more business-like method of handling the state lands.

Good Roads Paragraph.

The good roads paragraph was formulated by Robert C. Dunn of Princeton, and declares unequivocally for better roads and for a liberal appropriation for the maintenance of the highway commission.

President Louis W. Hill of the Great Northern and W. H. Gemmel of the Minnesota and International Falls road were present, urging a separate paragraph relative to the opening of the 233,000 acres of land in the Cass Lake, Crookston and Duluth districts, which was done.

A suggestion made by the representatives of the Minneapolis Publicity club that "Upper Minnesota" be substituted for "Northern Minnesota," was not adopted, the delegates preferring to retain the old description of "Northern Minnesota."

Brainerd was chosen as the next place of meeting, the lively Crow Wing county city meeting with no opposition.

There is little chance for his recovery.

MOROCCAN MINISTER HOME.

F. W. Carpenter, Former Sec. to Pres. Taft, Visits Mother.

Sauk Center.—Fred Warner Carpenter, former secretary to President Taft arrived here in Sauk Center and immediately went to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Sprague. Carpenter was met at the depot by Mrs. Eva Carpenter, his mother, who is the sister of Mrs. C. M. Sprague, and is visiting here for the summer. C. M. Sprague was away at Crookston at the development convention, and so Carpenter was taken to the home of Fay W. Sprague, cashier of the First National Bank.

Carpenter evaded the newspaper men at St. Paul and Minneapolis, as he is not anxious to discuss politics and to get into publicity at present. He was somewhat tired and in great need of rest.

"I am not sick, but simply in need of a little rest before taking up my work at Morocco," said Carpenter. He was reticent and did not wish to speak for publicity. He will remain here about two weeks and visit with Mrs. Carpenter, his mother, and take in the fishing season. His desire is to get all the quiet and rest possible and have a long visit with his mother.

Mrs. Carpenter, while delighted with her son's promotion, was visibly affected at the thought of him going to a foreign land.

SUED FOR $10,000

ACTION IS BEGUN AGAINST COMMODORE PEARY FOR ARCTIC SUPPLIES.

SUIT IS IN BERLIN COURT

Cook's Campaign Claims Peary Took Advantage of His Illness to Compel Him to Give Up Valuable Collection.

Berlin, June 9.—Commander Robert E. Peary was served here yesterday with papers in a suit brought by Rudolph Francke. Peary left for London this morning.

The American explorer had nothing to add to a statement made last night that he had placed the matter of litigation in the hands of American Ambassador Hill.

Francke was associated with Dr. Frederick A. Cook in North Polar expedition and alleges that Peary found him ill at Etah and took advantage of his condition to secure his collection of furs and walrus and whale teeth as the price for transporting him homeward. Francke demands $10,000 as the value of Arctic products which he claims to have handed over to the commander. The suit was brought in Berlin courts, notice of the action being served upon Peary when he arrived here yesterday to fill a lecture engagement.

THRILLING TALE OF SEA.

Crew Saved From Small Boats in Nick of Time.

Norfolk, Va., June 9.—After a three days' fight for life in two small boats, 450 miles out in the ocean, Miss Elizabeth Erickson, her father, Captain P. A. Erickson, nine men composing the crew, two dogs and a cat, were rescued in the nick of time by the British steamer Melts after having abandoned their barkentine Good News, of Philadelphia and are today safe on land.

It is a thrilling tale of the sea that Captain Erickson and his crew tell. Struck by a heavy storm the Good News sprang a leak. All hands remained continually at the pumps, but failed to keep her afloat and at noon June 3, the ship was abandoned.

The captain's daughter showed great bravery and after the Good News went to the bottom, she cheered the men. At times it seemed as though the two little boats would be swamped by the huge waves. A sail was rigged and one boat towed the other. Little progress was made, however, and there seemed no hope. Three days and nights passed slowly. Only a little hard bread and a half gallon of water comprised the provisions.

Should this appointment be made, it will be one of the greatest victories for Roosevelt since he brought about the peace negotiations in the Japanese-Russian war.

The convention will be made up of 1,065 delegates. Among the delegations from all parts of the state are there are quite a number of former followers of United States Senator Robert M. La Follette, but the majority are adherents of the so-called "stalwart" wing of the party.

HELPS THE AFFLICTED.

King and Queen of Italy Succor Earthquake Victims.

Avellino, Italy, June 8.—King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena spent today amidst the desolation of Calitri, ministering to their afflicted subjects. The town practically is a heap of ruins. Following the disastrous earthquake shock of yesterday, 8,000 inhabitants bivouacked last night in the country districts. There was much suffering, but the arrival of the sovereigns this morning gave new courage to the survivors.

Their majesties were affected by the sight which met them here. The king insisted on going through the streets half filled, with fallen walls, and visiting every spot where his discretion of advice were of value. While the king was so engaged the queen turned her attention to the more helpless ones. She had a word of comfort for every woman and caresses for the children. Her majesty said she would take care of the orphans. She personally visited the wounded ones, inquiring solicitously as to their needs.

Naples, June 8.—American Ambassador Leishman visited the American cruiser New York, which is lying in the harbor today. If the necessity arises, the cruiser will contribute to the work of relief for the earthquake sufferers.

The duke of Aosta today joined King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena at Calitri, the town in the province of Avellino where the greatest damage by earthquake was done.

The disturbances, however, were not otherwise noticeable and today the people throughout the region that was severely shaken yesterday are calmer in the hope that the worst is over.

Arrested for Arson.

Brampton, N. D., June 8.—A young man named McDowell was arrested at Hankinson on the charge of setting fire to the Cooper store in this city last week. The fire destroyed the Cooper building, the Kurth building, and a lumber yard, causing a loss of about $30,000.

Carey Benson was also arrested at Watertown, S. D., as an accomplice. Benson is the man who gained some fame last winter because it is alleged that he was chasing an escaped murderer from Ransom county.

It is suspected McDowell robbed the postoffice, which was in the Cooper store, then set fire to the building. There was at least $20 in silver in the drawer in the postoffice. Following the fire the lock and other parts of the drawer were found in the ruins, but there was no money. There were other reasons for suspecting McDowell, and it is claimed that he has made a confession.

Nicaraguan War Causes Panic.

Washington, June 9.—Official dispatches from Managua, Nic., state that war is fast reducing western Nicaragua to a state of panic. The exportation of fruit has been prohibited and money exchange is rapidly increasing.

QUAKE IN ITALY

INTERIOR PROVINCES EXPERIENCE SEVERE SHOCK—THIRTY SEVEN DEAD.

KING HURRIES TO SCENE

Details are Hard to Secure, but Great Damage to Property Is Reported —King and Queen Leave on Special Train.

Naples, June 7.—Earthquake shocks of unusual intensity were experienced throughout Italy, including the island of Sicily at 3:07 a. m. today.

The extent of the damage wrought has not been determined, but it is believed that at least thirty-seven persons were killed and that the property losses in certain districts will be heavy. The shock appeared to have spent its force chiefly in the province of Avellino in central Campania, east of Naples. The village of Calitri suffered the most. One report has it that half of the town was destroyed.

Rome, June 7.—The king, accompanied by Queen Helena, left for Avellino on a special train this afternoon. Two automobiles for their use were placed on board the train. The government has decided to ask parliament for an appropriation of $100,000 for immediate relief.

Avellino, Compartment of Campania, Italy, June 7.—The province of Avellino bore the brunt of a severe earthquake which was felt in southern Italy shortly before dawn today. A number of fatalities occurred and much damage was done to property but up to noon it was impossible to determine the extent of the devastation.

In this city little harm was done and the only death reported was that of an old man who died of fright. The population however, was terror stricken.

Reports from the villages throughout the provinces are much more grave. Twenty people are reported killed at Calitri, which is said to have been badly damaged.

The situation there is distressing. Ten persons are said to have met death at San Sossio, where sulphur waters, with which the district is rich, were released from bounds by the disturbance and flooded the vicinity. From the flood noxious gases arose. At Chianche, a house fell burying and killing an aged man. One person was killed and several were injured at Castel Baronia. Cabrit, too, was much damaged.

SENDS SPECIAL MESSAGE.

President Confers With Railroad Men and Enlightens Congress.

Washington, June 7.—President Taft's message to congress recommending a modification of the railroad bill so as to conform with the administration's agreement with the railroads, was read in the house soon after that body convened today.

Chairman Mann of the interstate commerce commission called up the railroad bill after the reading of the message had been concluded and attempted to obtain unanimous consent to send the measure to conference.

"I object," shouted Lenroot, of Wisconsin, one of the republican "insurgents," who is one of those favoring the acceptance by the house of the senate amendments. A storm of applause from the democratic side followed Lenroot's objection.

To facilitate action on the measure, a motion was made to dispense with the reading of the senate amendments, but this also was objected to, and Speaker Cannon ordered the reading of the bill.

In anticipation of action on the railroad bill, the "whips" of both sides of the chamber had sent out notices to members admonishing them that their presence was needed and nearly every member was in his seat when the house assembled.

Walked With Broken Neck.

Pittsburg, June 7.—With his neck broken and supporting his head with both hands, to keep it from falling limp on his shoulders, Elmre Grove, 25 years old, walked home with the assistance of two companions, after he had fallen from a street-car. When taken to a hospital later, the physicians said the man might live, though the spinal column was broken near the base of the skull. An operation will be performed to remove the pieces of broken bone.

Wants Mediation.

Washington, June 7.—General Estrada, the Nicaraguan insurgent chief, has appealed to the Cartago court of justice asking its influence to obtain from President Madriz, a reply to his offer of March 14 last, proposing that the United States mediate between the two and that an election be held for president at which neither Estrada nor Madriz shall be candidates.

Rain Stops Firemen's Tournament

Bismarck, N. D., June 7.—A light rain this morning put a temporary stop to the outdoor activities in connection with the state firemen's convention, but it is expected this afternoon the programme can be carried out as planned. There are hundreds of firemen from over the state, and over fifty towns and cities are represented.

To Welcome Roosevelt.

Washington, June 7.—Congressman Hanna has extended an invitation to President McVey of the state university at Grand Forks, Atty. D. C. Greenleaf, Minot, and John C. Lowe, court stenographer for Judge Burke of Valley City, to represent North Dakota at the reception to welcome Col. Theodore Roosevelt home in New York, June 18.

Congressman Hanna plans to make the affair non-partisan in every respect. President McVey is not supposed to be a factionalist in any way. Mr. Greenleaf is a democrat and Mr. Lowe is a republican.

Brewers Meet at Washington.

Washington, June 8.—In one of the most objective points of the "enemy's" campaign—the national capitol, where prohibition has been agitated for some time—the United States Brewers' association opened its annual convention, which will last for three days. About 150 members of the association, many other brewers and also manufacturers of machinery for breweries, attended the first sessions. The convention proper will be called to order tomorrow, when Pres. H. Hoster of Kansas City, Mo., will deliver an address and reports of trustees and standing committees will be read.

ROOSEVELT GIVES ROMANES LECTURE

Former President of United States at Oxford

LORD CURZON IN THE CHAIR

Sheldonian Theater Crowded With Distinguished People When American Talks on "Biological Analogies in History."

Oxford, England.—The Romanes lecture by Theodore Roosevelt, which was to have been delivered on May 18, but which was postponed on account of the death of King Edward, was given on June 7 by the distinguished American. The Sheldonian theater was filled to its capacity by notable persons and Oxford students and the lecture, which was on "Biological Analogies in History," was well received. Lord Curzon, chancellor of the university, presided.

In seeking to penetrate the causes of the mysteries that surround not only mankind but all life, both in the present and the past, said Mr. Roosevelt, we see strange analogies in the phenomena of life and death, of birth, growth and change, between those physical groups of animal life which we designate as species, forms, races and the highly complex and composite entities which rise before our minds when we speak of nations and civilizations. It is this study, he asserted, that has given science its present-day prominence, and the historian of mankind must work in the scientific spirit and use the treasure-houses of [illegible].

To illustrate, the lecturer took several instances of the development of new species and the extinction of species in the history of mammalian life, [illegible] that in some cases the causes can be traced with considerable accuracy, and in other cases we cannot so much as hazard a guess as to why a [illegible] change occurred.

Analogies in Human History.

Continuing, Mr. Roosevelt said in part:

[illegible] of the phenomena in the [illegible] there are, if not [illegible] certain analogies, in the [illegible] in the [illegible] of the [illegible] of the tem[illegible] death or trans[illegible] of varying kind [illegible].

[illegible] in human history, [illegible] from the specialization [illegible] existing [illegible] hitherto very [illegible] or non-[illegible] for instance, when [illegible] a variety of causes [illegible] more complex culti[illegible]. That is what occurred [illegible] in western Europe [illegible] of the Teutonic and [illegible] Scandinavian ethnic overflows [illegible]. All the modern countries [illegible] from the [illegible] by these northern invaders. When first created they could be called [illegible] states in the sense that [illegible] or all of the people composing [illegible] from races that [illegible] been civilized at all, and [illegible] for the first time entered [illegible] of civilized communities. In [illegible] part of western Europe the [illegible] thus formed consisted in [illegible] the inhabitants already in the land [illegible] empire, and it was [illegible] the new kingdoms first took [illegible]. Through a reflex action their [illegible] then extended back into the cold [illegible] which the invaders had come, [illegible] and Scandinavia witnessed [illegible] communities with essentially [illegible] civilization as their southern [illegible], though in those communities, [illegible] southern communities, there [illegible] of new blood, and in each [illegible] civilized nation which gradu[illegible] was composed entirely of [illegible] of the same race which in the [illegible] ages lived the life of [illegible] barbarism. The same [illegible] of the Slavs and the Slavonized [illegible] eastern Europe, when an infil[illegible] leaders from the [illegible] infiltration of Byzantine [illegible] from the south joined to produce [illegible] which have gradually, out of [illegible] communities of the forest [illegible] formed the mighty Russian [illegible].

"New" and "Young" Nations.

[illegible] the new form may represent [illegible] splitting off from a long-estab[illegible] developed and specialized [illegible] the nation is usually [illegible] "young," and is correctly [illegible] "new," nation; but the [illegible] always to be used with a clear [illegible] difference between what is [illegible] in such case and what is de[illegible] term in speaking of [illegible] just developed from a [illegible]. Carthage and Syracuse were [illegible] compared with Tyre and Corinth [illegible] Greek or Phoenician race was [illegible] of the word as old in the [illegible] in the old city. So, nowadays, [illegible] Manitoba is a new community [illegible] with England or Scotland; but the ancestral type of civilization and culture is as old in one case as in the other. I [illegible] do not mean for a moment that great changes are not produced by the [illegible] fact that the old civilized race is [illegible] placed in surroundings where it is again to go through the work of taming the wilderness, a work finished [illegible] before in the original [illegible] of the race. I merely mean that the ancestral history is the same in each [illegible]. We can rightly use the phrase "a young [illegible]" in speaking of Canadians or Australians, Americans or Afrikanders. But we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of such communities as those founded by the northmen and their descendants during that period of astonishing growth which saw the descendants of the Norse sea-thieves conquer and transform Normandy, Sicily, and the British islands; we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of the new states that grew up around Warsaw, Kief, Novgorod, and Moscow, as the wild savages of the steppes and the marshy forests struggled haltingly and stumblingly upward to become builders of cities and to form stable governments. The kingdoms of Charlemagne and Alfred were "new," compared with the empire on the Bosphorus; they were also in every way different; their lines of ancestral descent had nothing in common with those of the polyglot realm which paid tribute to the Caesars of Byzantium; their social problems and aftertime history were totally different. This is not true of those "new" nations which spring direct from old nations. Brazil, the Argentine, the United States, are all "new" nations, compared with the nations of Europe; but with whatever changes in detail, their civilization is nevertheless of the general European type, as shown in Portugal, Spain, and England. The differences between these "new" American and these "old" European nations are not as great as those which separate the "new" nations one from another and the "old" nations one from another. There are in each case very real differences between the new and the old nation—differences both for good and for evil; but in each case there is the same ancestral history to reckon with, the same type of civilization, with its attendant benefits and shortcomings; and, after the pioneer stages are passed, the problems to be solved, in spite of superficial differences, are in their essence the same; they are those that confront all civilized peoples, not those that confront peoples struggling from barbarism into civilization.

So, when we speak of the "death" of a tribe, a nation or a civilization, the term may be used for either one or two totally different processes; the analogy with what occurs in biological history being complete. Certain tribes of savages, the Tasmanians, for instance, and various little clans of American Indians, have within the last century or two completely died out; all of the individuals have perished, leaving no descendants, and the blood has disappeared. Certain other tribes of Indians have as tribes disappeared or are now disappearing; but their blood remains, being absorbed into the veins of the white intruders, or of the black men introduced by these white intruders; so that in reality they are merely being transformed into something absolutely different from what they were.

A like wide diversity in fact may be covered in the statement that a civilization has "died out."

Phenomena That Puzzle.

In dealing, not with groups of human beings in simple and primitive relations, but with highly complex, highly specialized, civilized, or semi-civilized societies, there is need of great caution in drawing analogies with what has occurred in the development of the animal world. Yet even in these cases it is curious to see how some of the phenomena in the growth and disappearance of these complex, artificial groups of human beings resemble what has happened in myriads of instances in the history of life on this planet.

Why do great artificial empires, whose citizens are knit by a bond of speech and culture much more than by a bond of blood, show periods of extraordinary growth, and again of sudden or lingering decay? In some cases we can answer readily enough; in other cases we cannot as yet even guess what the proper answer should be. If in any such case the centrifugal forces overcome the centripetal, the nation will of course fly to pieces, and the reason for its failure to become a dominant force is patent to every one. The minute that the spirit which finds its healthy development in local self-government, and in the antidote to the dangers of an extreme centralization, develops into mere particularism, into inability to combine effectively for achievement of a common end, then it is hopeless to expect great results. Poland and certain republics of the western hemisphere are the standard examples of failure of this kind; and the United States would have ranked with them, and its name would have become a byword of derision, if the forces of union had not triumphed in the civil war. So the growth of soft luxury after it has reached a certain point becomes a national danger patent to all. Again, it needs but little of the vision of a seer to foretell what must happen in any community if the average woman ceases to become the mother of a family of healthy children, if the average man loses the will and the power to work up to old age and to fight whenever the need arises. If the homely, commonplace virtues die out, if strength of character vanishes in graceful self-indulgence, if the virile qualities atrophy, then the nation has lost what no material prosperity can offset.

But there are plenty of other phenomena wholly or partially inexplicable. It is easy to see why Rome trended downward when great slave-tilled farms spread over what had once been a countryside of peasant proprietors, when greed and luxury and sensuality ate like acids into the fiber of the upper classes, while the mass of the citizens grew to depend, not upon their own exertions, but upon the state, for their pleasures and their very livelihood. But this does not explain why the forward movement stopped at different times, so far as different matters were concerned; at one time as regards literature, at another time as regards architecture, at another time as regards city building. We cannot even guess why the springs of one kind of energy dried up while there was yet no cessation of another kind.

Holland as an Example.

Take another and smaller instance, that of Holland. For a period covering a little more than the seventeenth century, Holland, like some of the Italian city states at an earlier period, stood on the dangerous heights of greatness beside nations so vastly her superior in territory and population as to make it inevitable that sooner or later she must fall from the glorious and perilous eminence to which she had been raised by her own indomitable soul. Her fall came; it could not have been indefinitely postponed; but it came far quicker than it needed to come, because of shortcomings on her part to which both Great Britain and the United States would be wise to pay heed. Her government was singularly ineffective, the decentralization being such as often to permit the separatist, the particularist, spirit of the provinces to rob the central authority of all efficiency. This was bad enough. But the fatal weakness was that so common in rich, peace-loving societies, where men hate to think of war as possible, and try to justify their own reluctance to face it either by high-sounding moral platitudes or else by a philosophy of short-sighted materialism. The Dutch were very wealthy. They grew to believe that they could hire others to do their fighting for them on land; and on sea, where they did their own fighting, and fought very well, they refused in time of peace to make ready fleets so efficient as either to insure the Dutch against the peace being broken or else to give them the victory when war came. To be opulent and unarmed is to secure ease in the present at the almost certain cost of disaster in the future.

It is therefore easy to see why Holland lost when she did her position among the powers; but it is far more difficult to explain why at the same time there should have come at least a partial loss of position in the world of art and letters. Some spark of divine fire burned itself out in the national soul. As the line of great statesmen, of great warriors, by land and sea, came to an end, so the line of the great Dutch painters ended. The loss of pre-eminence in the schools followed the loss of pre-eminence in camp and in council chamber.

In the little republic of Holland, as in the great empire of Rome, it was not death which came, but transformation. Both Holland and Italy teach us that races that fall may rise again.

Danger of Race Suicide.

There are questions which we of the great civilized nations are ever tempted to ask of the future. Is our time of growth drawing to an end? Are we as nations soon to come under the rule of that great law of death, which is itself but part of the great law of life? None can tell. Forces that we can see and other forces that are hidden or that can but dimly be apprehended are at work all around us, both for good and for evil. The growth in luxury, in love of ease, in taste for vapid and frivolous excitement, is both evident and unhealthy. The most ominous sign is the diminution in the birth-rate, in the rate of natural increase, now to a larger or lesser degree shared by most of the civilized nations of central and western Europe, of America and Australia; a diminution so great that if it continues for the next century at the rate which has obtained for the last 25 years, all the more highly civilized people will be stationary or else have begun to go backward in population, while many of them will have already gone very far backward.

There is much that should give us concern for the future. But there is much also which should give us hope. No man is more apt to be mistaken than the prophet of evil. I believe with all my heart that a great future remains for us; but whether it does or does not, our duty is not altered. However the battle may go, the soldier worthy of the name will with utmost vigor do his allotted task, and bear himself as valiantly in defeat as in victory. Come what will, we belong to peoples who have not yielded to the craven fear of being great. In the ages that have gone by, the great nations, the nations that have expanded and that have played a mighty part in the world, have in the end grown old and weakened and vanished; but so have the nations whose only thought was to avoid all danger, all effort, who would risk nothing, and who therefore gained nothing. In the end the same fate may overwhelm all alike; but the memory of the one type perishes with it while the other leaves its mark deep on the history of all the future of mankind.

In the first part of this lecture I drew certain analogies between what had occurred to forms of animal life through the procession of the ages on this planet, and what has occurred and is occurring to the great artificial civilizations which have gradually spread over the world's surface during the thousands of years that have elapsed since cities of temples and palaces first rose beside the Nile and the Euphrates, and the harbors of Minoan Crete bristled with the masts of the Aegean craft. But of course the parallel is true only in the roughest and most general way. Moreover, even between the civilizations of today and the civilizations of ancient times there are differences so profound that we must be cautious in drawing any conclusions for the present based on what has happened in the past. While freely admitting all of our follies and weaknesses of today, it is yet mere perversity to refuse to realize the incredible advance that has been made in ethical standards. I do not believe that there is the slightest necessary connection between any weakening of virile force and this advance in the moral standard, this growth of the sense of obligation to one's neighbor and of reluctance to do that neighbor wrong. We need have scant patience with that silly cynicism which insists that kindliness of character only accompanies weakness of character. On the contrary, just as in private life many of the men of strongest character are the very men of loftiest and most exalted morality, so I believe that in national life as the ages go by we shall find that the permanent national types will more and more tend towards those in which, while the intellect stands high, character stands higher; in which rugged strength and courage, rugged capacity to resist wrongful aggression by others, will go hand in hand with a lofty scorn of doing wrong to others. This is the type of Timoleon, of Hampden, of Washington and Lincoln.

Problems of Modern Nations.

Every modern civilized nation has many and terrible problems to solve within its own borders, problems that arise not merely from juxtaposition of poverty and riches, but especially from the self-consciousness of both poverty and riches. Each nation must deal with these matters in its own fashion, and yet the spirit in which the problem is approached must ever be fundamentally the same. It must be a spirit of broad humanity; of brotherly kindness; of acceptance of responsibility, one for each and each for all; and at the same time a spirit as remote as the poles from every form of weakness and sentimentality. As in war to pardon the coward is to do cruel wrong to the brave man whose life his cowardice jeopardizes, so in civil affairs it is revolting to every principle of justice to give to the lazy, the vicious, or even the feeble and dull-witted, a reward which is really the robbery of what braver, wiser, abler men have earned. The only effective way to help any man is to help him to help himself; and the worst lesson to teach him is that he can be permanently helped at the expense of some one else. True liberty shows itself to best advantage in protecting the rights of others, and especially of minorities. Privilege should not be tolerated because it is to the advantage of a minority, nor yet because it is to the advantage of a majority. No doctrinaire theories of vested rights or freedom of contract can stand in the way of our cutting out abuses from the body politic. Just as little can we afford to follow the doctrinaires of an impossible—and incidentally of a highly undesirable—social revolution which, in destroying individual rights (including property rights) and the family, would destroy the two chief agents in the advance of mankind, and the two chief reasons why either the advance or the preservation of mankind is worth while. It is an evil and a dreadful thing to be callous to sorrow and suffering, and blind to our duty to do all things possible for the betterment of social conditions. But it is an unspeakably foolish thing to strive for this betterment by means so destructive that they would leave no social conditions to better. In dealing with all these social problems, with the intimate relations of the family, with wealth in private use and business use, with labor, with poverty, the one prime necessity is to remember that, though hardness of heart is a great evil, it is no greater an evil than softness of head.

But in addition to these problems the most intimate and important of all which to a larger or less degree affect all the modern nations somewhat alike, we of the great nations that have expanded, that are now in complicated relations with one another and with alien races, have special problems and special duties of our own. You belong to a nation which possesses the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone. I belong to a nation which is trying, on a scale hitherto unexampled, to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the international duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British isles, in his various homes across the seas, and the American, both at home and abroad, are brought into contact with utterly alien peoples, some with a civilization more ancient than our own, others still in, or having but recently arisen from, the barbarism which our people left behind ages ago. The problems that arise are of well-nigh inconceivable difficulty. They cannot be solved by the foolish sentimentality of stay-at-home people, with little patent recipes, and those cut-and-dried theories of the political nursery which have such limited applicability amid the crash of elemental forces. Neither can they be solved by the raw brutality of the men who, whether at home or on the rough frontier of civilization, adopt might as the only standard of right in dealing with other men, and treat alien races only as subjects for exploitation.

No hard and fast rule can be drawn as applying to all alien races, because they differ from one another far more widely than some of them differ from us. But there are one or two rules which must not be forgotten. In the long run, there can be no justification for one race managing or controlling another unless the management and control are exercised in the interest and for the benefit of that other race. This is what our peoples have in the main done, and must continue in the future in even greater degree to do, in India, Egypt, and the Philippines alike. In the next place, as regards every race, everywhere, at home or abroad, we cannot afford to deviate from the great rule of righteousness which bids us treat each man on his worth as a man. He must not be sentimentally favored because he belongs to a given race; he must not be given immunity in wrong-doing, or permitted to cumber the ground, or given other privileges which would be denied to the vicious and unfit among themselves. On the other hand, where he acts in a way which would entitle him to respect and reward if he were of our own stock, he is just as much entitled to that respect and reward if he comes of another stock, even though that other stock produces a much smaller proportion of men of his type than does our own. This has nothing to do with social intermingling, with what is called social equality. It has to do merely with the question of doing to each man and each woman that elementary justice which will permit him or her to gain from life the reward which should always accompany thrift, sobriety, self-control, respect for the rights of others, and hard and intelligent work to a given end. To more than such just treatment no man is entitled, and less than such just treatment no man should receive.

Duty of Nation to Nation.

The other type of duty is the international duty, the duty owed by one nation to another. I hold that the laws of morality which should govern individuals in their dealings one with the other are just as binding concerning nations in their dealings one with the other. The application of the moral law must be different in the two cases, because in one case it has, and in the other it has not, the sanction of a civil law with force behind it. The individual can depend for his rights upon the courts, which themselves derive their force from the police power of the state. The nation can depend upon nothing of the kind; and therefore, as things are now, it is the highest duty of the most advanced and freest peoples to keep themselves in such a state of readiness as to forbid to any barbarism or despotism the hope of arresting the progress of the world by striking down the nations that lead in that progress. It would be foolish indeed to pay heed to the unwise persons who desire disarmament to be begun by the very peoples who, of all others, should not be left helpless before any possible foe. But we must reprobate quite as strongly both the leaders and the peoples who practise, or encourage or condone, aggression and iniquity by the strong at the expense of the weak. We should tolerate lawlessness and wickedness neither by the weak nor by the strong; and both weak and strong we should in return treat with scrupulous fairness. The foreign policy of a great and self-respecting country should be conducted on exactly the same plane of honor, of insistence upon one's own rights and of respect for the rights of others, as when a brave and honorable man is dealing with his fellows. Permit me to support this statement out of my own experience. For nearly eight years I was the head of a great nation and charged especially with the conduct of its foreign policy; and during those years I took no action with reference to any other people on the face of the earth that I would not have felt justified in taking as an individual in dealing with other individuals.

I believe that we of the great civilized nations of today have a right to feel that long careers of achievement lie before our several countries. To each of us is vouchsafed the honorable privilege of doing his part, however small, in that work. Let us strive hardily for success, even if by so doing we risk failure, spurning the poorer souls of small endeavor who know neither failure nor success. Let us hope that our own blood shall continue in the land, that our children and children's children to endless generations shall arise to take our places and play a mighty and dominant part in the world. But whether this be denied or granted by the years we shall not see, let at least the satisfaction be ours that we have carried onward the lighted torch in our own day and generation. If we do this, then, as our eyes close, and we go out into the darkness, and other hands grasp the torch, at least we can say that our part has been borne well and valiantly.

THE BEST THAT MORGAN GOT

Imperious Financier May Keep In Memory One Man He Could Not Browbeat.

The yarn of the other day about Mayor Gaynor and a bell-boy recalls another one. Gaynor, you know, slept at the Hotel Astor one night, having been detained there very late. In the morning he couldn't find his way to the elevator, and met one of the pert youths who browbeat the hotel guest.

"Aw, foller yer nose," said the kid, "I ain't got no time to bother wit' youse."

Mr. Gaynor's nose ultimately led him to the office and shortly afterward a clerk's nose led him to the seventeenth floor and the boy's nose led him to Broadway, with instructions to stay out of the Astor forever after. It recalled to a reporter the time that J. Pierpont Morgan got tangled up with a menial. Mr. Morgan, you may know, is imperious and dictatorial. He speaks in grunts. When the grunt is not readily interpreted by his unfortunate opposite, he roars.

On this occasion Mr. Morgan had gone to one of the big uptown hotels to attend a banquet. He asked a large person at the entrance where he could find the banqueting hall. The large person sent him along, and Mr. Morgan next met a hall porter who had just been discharged and was looking for a chance to get even. Mr. Morgan grunted inquiringly. The porter grunted sullenly.

"Wuh-wuh-wuh," grunted Mr. Morgan.

"Wah-wah-wah," growled the porter.

"How dare you?" asked Morgan.

"Say," said the porter, belligerently, "I don't know who you are, you old skeezicks, but if you unpin that lip uh yourn again I'll hang a brace on it."

"My name is Morgan," said the banker, indignantly.

"Well," said the porter, after looking him over carefully, "you look it."

And that's the best that Morgan got.—Boston Traveler.

Mummified Heads Scarce.

Mummified heads of South American Indians belonging to a tribe living on the slopes of the Andes near Quito, in Ecuador, once so easily purchased, are becoming extremely scarce. The head is shrunk by some secret process known only to the natives, being thus reduced from life size, nine or ten inches from tip of chin to top of head, to five inches.

The curious thing is that the head can be reduced in this fashion without destroying the features. These heads, some of which are of great antiquity, are now almost impossible to procure. Their sale is forbidden by law.—Wide World Magazine.

Satirical Voltaire.

One day some mice said to one another: "How charming is this world! What an empire is ours! This palace so superb was built for us; from all eternity God made for us these large holes. Do you see those fat hams under that dim ceiling? They were created there for us by Nature's hands; those mountains of lard, inexhaustible aliment, will be ours till the end of time. Yes, we are, great God, if our sages tell us the truth, the masterpiece, the aim, of all Thy work! Cats are dangerous and prompt to devour, but it is to instruct and correct us!"—Voltaire.

Common Law.

The common law of England is an ancient collection of unwritten maxims and customs of British, Saxon and Danish origin, which, by long use and approval, have become fundamental in English jurisprudence. Many of the principles of the English common law hold in this country and throughout the English speaking world as well.

STRONGLY DEMAND REAPPORTIONMENT

UPPER MINNESOTA BOOSTERS TO STICK TO IT TILL THE VICTORY IS WON.

NEXT MEETING AT BRAINERD

System of Township Schools and New Land Laws Are Resolved Upon. One-Mill Tax for Good Roads Is Requested.

Crookston, Minn., — At least one thousand enthusiastic boosters of northern Minnesota crowded the convention when the first session of the Crookston convention of the Northern Minnesota Development association began, and every man meant business.

Senator Stevens' declaration that the Republican state convention would incorporate in its platform a demand for reapportionment if the 30 counties of northern Minnesota made only reasonable demands, was everywhere commented upon. It was taken generally as marking a definite step onward, and it intensified the feeling of optimism the delegates carried into the convention hall.

The "get together" smoker, at which Senator Stevens' promise was made, was an optimism breeder in itself. There were more than 200 delegates in attendance and the keynote of the convention was struck by the very first speaker, Al H. Jester of Bemidji, a former Minneapolis man, praised the booster and denounced the knocker. Representative L. W. Bills of Park Rapids, County Attorney Boyle of Cook and Senator Stevens talked for northern Minnesota. The three larger cities of the state were represented by Mac Martin of Minneapolis, Col. J. H. Davidson of St. Paul and Charles Mitchell of Duluth.

Minneapolis as a Buyer.

Martin emphasized the fact that Minneapolis wanted to buy from Crookston, rather than sell, and the spirit of the Minneapolis idea met with instant appreciation. Besides the Duluth and St. Paul delegations, in number at least, Minneapolis is making an unenviable showing.

Two hundred St. Paul representatives arrived. Against these busy crowds is matched an official delegation from Minneapolis numbering six persons—Richard Kilgore, C. B. McCall, Mac Martin, Frank L. Thresher, H. I. Dafoe and F. K. Fowler. Two or three commercial travelers and the newspaper men from Minneapolis were pressed into service and the Mill City delegation, by spreading gorgeous banners and making lots of noise, is trying to attract the attention that is due the city.

H. J. Maxfield, secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development association, presided at the first session of the convention, which began promptly at 10 o'clock. The session was opened by prayer delivered by Rev. E. W. Akers of Crookston, and he was followed by Mayor Allan J. McKinnon of Crookston and Charles J. Conger, president of the Polk County Development association, who welcomed the delegates to the city and county.

These addresses were followed by the appointment of committees.

Strong resolutions were adopted by the Northern Minnesota Development association at the afternoon session Friday. They include:

A demand for reapportionment at the next session of the legislature.

A 1-mill state tax for good roads and employment of good roads experts.

A correction of alleged evils in the administration of state lands.

An appropriation of $100,000 for the board of immigration.

Establishment of a system of township rural schools and modification of the present school system so as to provide for their co-ordination with other institutions of learning.

Crookston, Minn., June 4.—The Northern Minnesota Development association has said its last word. The resolutions score the state land policy and make an appeal for reapportionment. The demand for reapportionment comes first in the resolutions, as the people of this section believe that their future development and fair treatment rests, above all else, on this. But the state land policy is criticized more mildly than it would have been had it not been feared that political color would be given to the expression of the association.

As it is, the paragraph expressing a demand for a change in the state land policy is in substance as outlined by Robert J. Wells, candidate for state auditor in an interview recently given to the public.

Conservative Counsel Prevails.

There were men on the committee hostile to State Auditor Iverson. There was a disposition to make the expression stronger but more conservative counsel prevailed and the chapter was modified. Auditor Iverson had arrived on the ground and it is possible that the activities of himself and of his friends had something to do with toning down the resolutions relative to the land policy.

The suggestion that mineral rights be reserved to the buyer of lands was made, but turned down, even though accompanied by the suggestion of the accompaniment of a 25-cent royalty. The committee did insert a declaration to the effect that the timber on land go to the settler so that he might have an opportunity to build his home.

In view of the bar of the constitution to securing what northern Minnesota thinks she wants, F. E. McPartlin of International Falls, came forward with the suggestion of a legislational convention, but this was turned down on the ground that northern Minnesota would not be ready for a legislational convention until it had secured reapportionment. It is proposed to have a constitutional amendment placed before the people with a view of securing a more business-like method of handling the state lands.

Good Roads Paragraph.

The good roads paragraph was formulated by Robert C. Dunn of Princeton, and declares unequivocally for better roads and for a liberal appropriation for the maintenance of the highway commission.

President Louis W. Hill of the Great Northern and W. H. Gemmel of the Minnesota and International Falls road were present, urging a separate paragraph relative to the opening of the 233,000 acres of land in the Cass Lake, Crookston and Duluth districts, which was done.

A suggestion made by the representatives of the Minneapolis Publicity club that "Upper Minnesota" be substituted for "Northern Minnesota," was not adopted, the delegates preferring to retain the old description of "Northern Minnesota."

Brainerd was chosen as the next place of meeting, the lively Crow Wing county city meeting with no opposition.

Minneapolis, Minn. — J. M. Stellman was crushed to death by a descending elevator in the Minnesota Plow company's building. He was the driver for a sprinkling wagon for the city.

Red Wing.—Mrs. Mary A. Geld, 70 years old, and who was a resident of St. Paul for half a century, died at the home of her son, Coroner R. L. C. Geld. She came to this city only recently to reside.

Duluth, Minnesota. — Axel Peterson, son of Fred Peterson of 120 Garfield avenue, was drowned while fishing in the St. Louis river. The boat was upset while Peterson and a companion were trying to recover an oar.

Minneapolis, Minn. — The regular quarterly dividend of 6 per cent per annum on its common stock was declared by the Twin City Rapid Transit company, payable July 1 to stockholders of record on the books of the corporation.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Viktoria Penranen, 44 years old, an inmate of the state hospital at Fergus Falls, will be deported to Knupio, Finland, by the immigration department. He was taken to Quebec by Inspector Robert F. Davis of Minneapolis.

Following the presentation of that time-honored emotional drama, "East Lynne," at the Bijou, the Klimt & Gazzolo Company will be seen in "The Fatal Wedding," a melodrama of the better class which scored heavily locally a number of years ago.

Fairmont. — Charles Scott, aged 25, died from lockjaw. He was a farmer, and a few days ago was accidentally wounded by a target rifle. The injury was not considered dangerous, until tetanus developed and his jaws set. Death resulted in 24 hours.

Minneapolis. — Love's dream, but this time not a young one, was unfolded in Judge Hale's court where Anna Olson, 70 years old is suing Ola Osmund, 74, also known as Ola Osmundson, for breach of promise. Trial of the issue began in the district court.

Winona. — While attempting to save her two-year-old child, who had run directly in the path of a rapidly moving street car, Mrs. William Redmann stumbled and pitched beneath the coach, the rear wheels crushing her head to a pulp. The child was jerked from the rails by the motorman and was uninjured.

St. Cloud.—The commencement exercises of the St. Cloud normal was held at the Davidson theater today and 199 seniors, the largest normal graduating class in the history of the state, received diplomas. Dean W. S. Pattee, of the university law school, delivered an address on "The Mission of the Christian Scholar."

Hastings, Minnesota. — Patrick J. Gibbons, who murdered his wife and Rev. E. J. Walsh in South St. Paul Sunday evening, was arraigned before Police Justice A. F. Joneson at the courthouse. He pleaded not guilty and waived further hearing and was committed without bail to the next term of the district court, which convenes in November.

Albert Lea, Minn. — The First District Breeders' association met here and there was a large attendance, especially from outside the county. The next meeting will be held in Rochester in December. The officers chosen were as follows: President, J. J. Furlong, Austin; vice-president, Finley McMartin, Claremont; secretary, J. R. Morley, Owatonna; treasurer, J. C. Mills, Preston.

Grand Rapids.—Antone Stotak, an employe of the Consolidated Water Power and Paper company of this city, was instantly killed while assisting in moving a large beater roll, weighing between two and three tons, from the beater room of the paper mill through a large opening in the floor, near the elevator to the basement below for the purpose of loading it into a car and shipping it to Appleton for repairs.

We have plenty of pure food laws—let us have some poor food laws.

Remember that good drainage is important on potato fields. Potatoes will stand less excess of moisture than most farm crops, and unless there is natural drainage resort should be had to artificial drainage.

After a hard day's work in the field, the horses will enjoy a few moments to roll in the yard or about the straw pile. Your horses will scratch themselves more in five minutes by rolling than you can with a curry-comb in thirty minutes.

It is poor policy to keep a sow a year at a cost of seven to twelve dollars and then go off to an auction or a dance and leave her without an attendant at the critical time of farrowing.

Bran, milk and pasturage are some of the bulky feeds well adapted to the real young pig. They help to distend the digestive system, which enables the pig to use cheaper and coarser feeds to better advantage than the pig raised on concentrates.

WAS GREAT SLEUTH

Inspector Byrnes' Death Recalls Activity as Officer.

Rose From the Ranks to a Millionaire and Laid the Clever Trap That Caught Jay Gould's Blackmailer.

New York.—Probably no man was better known in the world of police and none was more feared by crooks than Thomas F. Byrnes, former detective and inspector who died in this city a few days ago. It was while inspector and in charge of the detective bureau at police headquarters in Mulberry street that Byrnes won his greatest fame.

From the day he became a member of the police, in August, 1869, until he retired on May 27, 1895, Inspector Byrnes was a thief catcher first of all and it was as such that he became a valuable servant of the people.

Byrnes rose quickly from the ranks. He was first a patrolman, then a roundsman, later on a sergeant, then captain, inspector and finally commissioner.

Thirty years ago the city was overrun with thieves and thugs. A reign of terror had spread over the town. Murders were committed almost nightly. It was at that time that Byrnes was called to Mulberry street and told to organize a detective bureau. He had shown considerable detective ability while occupying positions of lower rank in the police department, and this had attracted the attention of his superiors to the quiet but determined man.

In a short time he had organized what became known as the central office of detectives and assigned to that bureau were the best thief catchers in the department. He had only a limited number of detective sergeants under his command, but had the power to reduce those at any time and without trial. In that way he was able to surround himself with the best talent the department could afford.

Thomas F. Byrnes.

Byrnes was a man of striking personality. He was tall and well put together. He wore a big mustache and never talked in a loud voice, except when he wanted to let people know that he would stand no trifling.

His wife was a school teacher in her earlier days. Their daughters, pretty and highly educated, adored their father, who was intensely proud of them. He was proud, too, of his fine summer home at Red Bank, N. J.

Byrnes was a very rich man. He was said to have been a many times millionaire. He was a witness before the Lexow committee and there he told how he came to make his fortune.

It was generally believed that Jay Gould was among other of his friends who gave him valuable tips on money making.

Byrnes was not ungrateful. Gould became the victim of a blackmailer, who wrote so many threatening letters that Gould was in constant fear of his life. The letters were always mailed on a Sunday, but never from the same box. There was no clue to his identity and to catch him seemed hopeless. Byrnes undertook the task. First he distributed photographs of an envelope addressed to Jay Gould by the blackmailer among the entire police force. Then, on a Sunday, he stationed a policeman, plain clothes man or postal inspector at every mail box in the city. Every time a letter was dropped in the box was opened and the letter inspected. Finally the right man dropped in the right letter and was promptly arrested.

"Colonel Wells," as he was known, was convicted and got a long term. The case perhaps brought Byrnes more fame than any of his others.

Memorial Well Deserved.

From Borsad, Bombay, India, the Rev. Robert Henderson, a missionary, writes to the New York Tribune, to call attention to a proposed practical memorial to Dr. Louis Klopsch, of the Christian Herald, long known as a minister of relief for the afflicted in all lands. In India he is gratefully remembered for his work in aid of the famine sufferers of 1897 and 1900. Mr. Henderson says that it is planned to establish a Christian farm colony, of at least 20 farmers with model farmhouses for themselves and families, and sheds for their cattle, and also a good house for a mission worker who would act as pastor of the place. The colony is to have a church with a suitable inscription carved in stone in its porch, describing briefly the great work of which the colony is a memorial. The name is to be Klopschpur.

Way to Choose.

A friend has let out a secret regarding the way in which some young women judge novels.

In a bus two girls were talking of what they read.

"Oh, I choose a novel easily enough," said one. "I go to the circulating library and look at the last chapters. If I find the rain softly and sadly dropping over one or two lonely graves, I don't have it; but if the morning sun is glimmering over bridal robes of white satin, I know it's all right."

Brewery trust bossism" is declared the greatest menace to the Republican party by the St. Cloud Journal-Press.

The Democratic state convention has been called to meet at Minneapolis on July 28. The county conventions will be held on Saturday, July 23, and the official call will be issued shortly.

The state fire marshal's report to the governor shows that there were 2500 fires during the year 1910 in this state. Of these Minneapolis led with 512, and St. Paul had 321. The total loss in the state was $79,420. Fourteen persons were arrested on arson charges but only one indictment was found, and that case has not yet been tried.

The Thief River News is going to prove that county division will not mean increased taxes. The News might also inform us of the best method to make water run up hill.

The Roosevelt club banquet at St. Paul Saturday evening was addressed by James R. Garfield and Gifford Pinchot. It is a notable commentary on political conditions in Minnesota that the president's name was not mentioned. And yet we are told that there is harmony in their ranks.

A teacher in a Duluth school recently found the subjoined facts in a composition on Longfellow, the poet, written by a 15 year old girl: "Henry W. Longfellow was born in Portland, Me., while his parents were traveling in Europe. He had many fast friends, among whom the fastest were Phoebe and Alice Cary."

The candidates for lieutenant governor are very busy, and it is almost impossible to hazard a guess on the outcome. It is generally conceded that Sam Gordon, the Browns Valley newspaper editor, will lead on the first ballot, but it is also apparent that Billy Hamm and Ed Smith do not desire his nomination and a coalition of the opposing forces is inevitable. This would indicate the probable selection of Dr. Gates or "Cash" Sprague.

The Republican party was never in greater danger of defeat than at this moment; and those who are doing most to bring this about are the silly compromisers who are disgusting the voters that still remain faithful, says the Red Wing Republican. Let the party cut loose from "the interests." That is the demand. The country stands by the insurgents because they oppose the control of this government by money and business interests. Can the leaders not understand that by this time?

Lest we forget, only nine of the 28 republicans of the national house of representatives are in a position to stand before their constituents and report that they voted to unseat Cannon as speaker. Page 3490 of the congressional Record shows that on March 19 all but nine Republicans voted against the Burleson resolution which would have unseated Speaker Cannon and made it possible to elect a new speaker. Every Democrat voted to unseat "Uncle Joe." Lindbergh and Davis are the only Minnesota Republicans reported recorded in favor of declaring Speaker Cannon's seat vacant.

The G. A. R. boys of Minneapolis on Memorial Day inaugurated a movement to world's peace and disarmament, says the Fairmont Sentinel. The veterans all over the country are to be asked to join in the movement and to enlist every influence in its behalf that is possible. It is eminently fit and proper that those who know the horrors of war by experience should inaugurate a movement which means more for humanity than any other attempted. Let us hope hat the seed sown by the Minneapolis soldier boys will scatter on the wings of heaven to all parts of the earth.

"In Minnesota the farmers at all intermediate points between the twin cities and Duluth are compelled to pay the railroads 7 1-2 cents per hundred pounds for shipping wheat to either terminal, while the Twin city farmers, who "farm the farmers of the state" and get rich returns are charged only five cents per hundred pounds from one point to another, observes the Waseca Herald. Is it education that the farmers need to keep them on the farm or is it fair and equal rates and priveleges as shippers and business men, as producers and also as consumers, that will make them satisfied with their laborious calling?

Hon. E. E. Adams, the broad gauge and able editor of the Fergus Falls Journal, comes out squarely in favor of the nomination of Thomas D. O'Brien by the republican state convention to succeed himself as a justice of the supreme court, says Robert C. Dunn in his Princeton Union. Mr. O'Brien is an ornament to the bench, and if fitness were the prime requisite he would be renominated by acclamation. We cordially approve of the Journal's article which is herewith produced.

"There has been great deal of talk about taking judiciary out of politics and nominating men for the bench regardless of their political affiliations. The republicans of the state are going to be put to the test in this matter. There is but one democratic judge on the supreme bench at the present time, Judge Thomas D. O'Brien of St. Paul. He was a prominent member of the Ramsey county bar before Governor Johnson was elected governor. The governor appointed him insurance commissioner because at that time a strong man was needed in that important office. He became one of the most influential commissioners in the country and was one of Governor Johnson's most influential advisers during his three administrations, and was the greatest moral and intellectual force in it. He was a high class man, and when a vacancy occurred in the supreme court, Governor Johnson appointed him to that position, and it was one of the most creditable apointments of his administraton. During the time he has served on the bench he has served most creditably, and if the republican party has any sense of the fitness of things, and any desire to do that which will commend them to the people of the state, it will not pull the supreme court into politics but will renominate Judge O'Brien notwithstanding he was a democrat before taking his place upon the bench."

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Ogilvie Sentinel: Nearly all Minnesota calls for John Lind. Republicans as well as Democrats are wondering if he will consent to be named by the convention, and are wishing that he will.

Walker Pilot: After reading over the list of candidates for state treasurer one wonders whether the approaching republican convention is a political affair or just a bankers' re-union.

St. Peter Herald: William J. Bryan has attacked Governor Harmon in the Commoner and seeks to discredit Ohio's chief magistrate as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president. In doing so he repeats the tactics he used when a governor of our own state was put forward for the place. Col. Bryan has been signally honored by the democracy, and in the next campaign, when democratic success is not only possible but probable, it would be becoming in him to permit the rank and file of the party to select its own candidate and then prepare to support him unitedly.

Warren Register (Rep.): If state legislatures are not to be trusted to elect United State senators, let's do away with state legislatures altogether. The member of the legislature who will sell his vote for senator will sell it for any measure that comes before the legislature, if the interested party will pay him his price. If legislatures are not honest enough to be allowed to choose senators, how can we trust them to make laws upon any subject affecting the public welfare? There's no consistency about the demand for popular election of senators, for it is a cinch that any man who is on the square in matters of legislation will be on the square when called upon to aid in the election of a senator.

Hallock Enterprise. The average intelligent voter will not longer blindly follow party dictation and he has awakened to the monstrous deceptin of party leaders who have in the past appealed to his partisan pride, while the men for whom he has shouted and voted have been convenient "rubber stamps" for the Aldrich-Cannon program.

Hibbing Mesaba Ore: Just how a congressman can be an insurgent and yet support the Taft administration is one of the things that needs a heap more explanation than has been given so far.

Cannon Falls Beacon: Mr. Tawney is himself to blame if the country insists on a practical demonstration of the tariff commission plan, introduced by him and passed by the house, before they will accept it. Mr. Tawney has been working all sorts of flim flam practices on the people in an effort to distract their attention from the main point at issue which is that he is the trusted agent of monopoly.

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

The skin is composed of two distinct layers. One is known as the epidermis, or outer skin, which has no fibres, and serves principally as a covering to the body, and a protection from outward dangers to the delicate flesh beneath. The other layer is known as the derma, or true skin, and is composed of elastic fibres, fat tissue, glands, lymphatics, nerves, etc. The thousands of tiny veins and arteries with which it is interlaced constantly supply every fibre and tissue with healthful properties from the circulation to keep the skin smooth and perfect.

This is changed, however, when the blood becomes infected with humors, acids or impurities. Instead of constantly supplying rich, nutritive properties to the skin, the circulation deposits the acrid impurity with which it is contaminated, into the sensitive fibres and tissues. This causes irritation and inflammation, which splits or breaks the thin outer cuticle, while the tissues beneath ulcerate and discharge upon the surface in the form of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Tetter, etc. There is likewise a dry form of skin diseases, such as Acne, Psoriasis, etc. In these varieties the humor in the blood diseases and inflames the glands, hair follicles, etc., causing them to swell and protrude to the outer surface. Pimples, rashes, eruptions and like troubles, are all dependent on an imperfect blood, and no one can have a good complexion, free from humiliating blemishes, unless the skin is kept healthy by good blood.

S.S.S. CURED HER.
Some time ago I was troubled with a severe skin affection called Acne. Small pimples would appear on my face and neck which would in time fester and become inflamed. My complexion was muddy and sallow and most unsightly. I chanced to read about S.S.S., and concluded to give it a trial; the result was entirely satisfactory, my complexion soon becoming clear, the pimples disappearing, and my skin became soft and smooth. I cannot too highly recommend S.S.S. to any who are likewise afflicted.
MRS. LUCY GOODING
Pollock, La.

S.S.S. cures Skin Diseases of every kind by neutralizing the acids and removing the humors from the blood. It cools the acid-heated circulation, builds it up to normal strength, multiplies its rich, nutritious corpuscles, and adds to its purity in every way. Then the skin, instead of being irritated, inflamed and diseased by acrid impurities or fiery humors, is nourished, soothed and softened by a cooling, healthy stream of blood. S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and therein lies its ability to cure skin diseases. Book on Skin Diseases and medical advice free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Get the Choice Oranges of Our 5,000 Groves

We pick, pack and ship 60% of the California Orange crop. These are of varying grades. The choicest selections are packed under the "Sunkist" label. To get the finest oranges you must insist on fruit that is wrapped in tissue paper with the word "Sunkist" printed thereon.

"Sunkist" Navel Oranges Are Seedless

They are delightfully sweet, juicy and fiberless. They are firm, thin skinned and deep tinted.

"Sunkist" oranges and lemons are picked by gloved hands, wrapped in "Sunkist" tissue paper, packed carefully so as to eliminate chances of becoming bruised or soft. No bruised fruit or fruit that falls to the ground is put in a "Sunkist" wrapper.

Look for "Sunkist" on the wrapper. Ask your dealer for oranges and lemons with "Sunkist" label on the tissue paper wrapper. Oranges and lemons without "Sunkist" wrappers are not "Sunkist" brand. Be sure you get oranges and lemons in their original "Sunkist" wrappers.

Free: Rogers' Orange Spoon

To make it doubly interesting for you to insist on "Sunkist" in the original wrappers—either oranges or lemons—we will give you a beautiful Rogers' Orange Spoon. Just send us twelve wrappers and six 2c stamps for postage, packing, etc., and we will send the spoon by return mail. Get a dozen "Sunkist" and send today for your first spoon. Address

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. SADIE MULLEN, 2728 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

A Horse Lover.

James R. Keene, who is noted no less as a horseman than as a financier, said at a luncheon at his Cedarhurst residence:

"My love of horses has been a great comfort to me all my life. I have always kept my horses in their place, though I haven't allowed them to interfere with my business.

"Some men carry their love of horses altogether too far. Such a one was a young father who stood, with his fair wife, before the crib of their first born.

"'Isn't he wonderful?' the young mother cried. 'Did you ever see anything like him at twenty-six months?'

"'Maternal love is all very well,' the father retorted, impatiently, 'but please don't try to compare it with a two-year-old thoroughbred.'"

Good Work Proceeds Slowly.

At the present rate of increase nearly forty-five years must elapse before sufficient hospital accommodations to provide for all the indigent consumptives in the United States will be provided, declares the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Although over 7,000 beds in hospitals, sanatoria, camps and wards for tuberculous patients were established last year, there are fully 300,000 indigent consumptives who ought to be placed in such institutions and a total of only 22,720 beds in the entire country. On May 1, 1909, there were 15,214 beds for consumptives and 291 institutions. The annual report of the national association shows an increase of 99 institutions and 7,500 beds.

SYNOPSIS.

Miss Innes, spinster and guardian of Gertrude and Halsey, established summer headquarters at Sunnyside. Amidst numerous difficulties the servants deserted. As Miss Innes locked up for the night, she was startled by a dark figure on the veranda. She passed a terrible night, which was filled with unseemly noises. In the morning Miss Innes found a strange link cuff button in a clothes hamper. Gertrude and Halsey arrived with Jack Bailey. The house was awakened by a revolver shot. A strange man was found shot to death in the hall. It proved to be the body of Arnold Armstrong, whose banker father owned the country house. Miss Innes found Halsey's revolver on the lawn. He and Jack Bailey had disappeared.

"Especially what?"

"Especially since Jack Bailey and Arnold Armstrong were notoriously bad friends. It was Bailey who got Arnold into trouble last spring—something about the bank. And then, too—"

"Go on," I said. "If there is anything more, I ought to know."

"There's nothing more," he said evasively. "There's just one thing we may bank on, Miss Innes. Any court in the country will acquit a man who kills an intruder in his house at night. If Halsey—"

"Why, you don't think Halsey did it!" I exclaimed. There was a queer feeling of physical nausea coming over me.

"No, no, not at all," he said with forced cheerfulness. "Come, Miss Innes, you're a ghost of yourself, and I am going to help you upstairs and call your maid. This has been too much for you."

About six o'clock Gertrude came in. She was fully dressed, and I sat up nervously.

"Poor Aunty!" she said. "What a shocking night you have had!" She came over and sat down on the bed, and I saw she looked very tired and worn.

"Is there anything new?" I asked anxiously.

"Nothing. The car is gone, but Warner"—he is the chauffeur—"Warner is at the lodge and knows nothing about it."

"Well," I said, "if I ever get my hands on Halsey Innes I shall not let go until I have told him a few things. When we get this cleared up, I am going back to the city to be quiet. One more night like the last two will end me. The peace of the country—fiddlesticks!"

Whereupon I told Gertrude of the noises the night before, and the figure on the veranda in the east wing. As an afterthought I brought out the pearl cuff-link.

"I have no doubt now," I said, "that it was Arnold Armstrong the night before last, too. He had a key, no doubt, but why he should steal into his father's house I cannot imagine. He could have come with my permission easily enough. Anyhow, whoever it was that night left this little souvenir."

Gertrude took one look at the cuff-link and went as white as the pearls in it; she clutched at the foot of the bed and stood staring. As for me, I was quite as astonished as she was.

"Where did—you—find it?" she asked finally, with a desperate effort at calm. And while I told her she stood looking out of the window with a look I could not fathom on her face. It was a relief when Mrs. Watson tapped at the door and brought me some tea and toast. The cook was in bed, completely demoralized, she reported, and Liddy, brave with the daylight, was looking for footprints around the house. Mrs. Watson herself was a wreck; she was blue-white around the lips, and she had one hand tied up. She said she had fallen downstairs in her excitement. It was natural, of course, that the thing would shock her, having been the Armstrongs' housekeeper for several years and knowing Mr. Arnold well.

Gertrude had slipped out during my talk with Mrs. Watson, and I dressed and went downstairs. The billiard and card rooms were locked until the coroner and the detectives got there, and the men from the club had gone back for more conventional clothing.

I could hear Thomas in the pantry alternately wailing for Mr. Arnold, as he called him, and citing the tokens that had precursed the murder. The house seemed to choke me, and, slipping a shawl around me, I went out on the drive. At the corner by the east wing I met Liddy. Her skirts were draggled with dew to her knees and her hair was still in crimps.

"Go right in and change your clothes," I said sharply. "You're a sight, and at your age!"

She had a golf stick in her hand, and she said she had found it on the lawn. There was nothing unusual about it, but it occurred to me that a golf stick with a metal end might have been the object that had scratched the stairs near the cardroom. I took it from her, and sent her up for dry garments. Her daylight courage and self-importance, and her shuddering delight in the mystery, irritated me beyond words. After I left her I made a circuit of the building. Nothing seemed to be disturbed; the house looked as calm and peaceful in the morning sun as it had the day I had been coerced into taking it. There was nothing to show that inside had been mystery and violence and sudden death.

In one of the tulip beds back of the house an early blackbird was pecking viciously at something that glittered in the light. I picked my way gingerly over through the dew and stooped down; almost buried in the soft ground was a revolver! I scraped the earth off it with the tip of my shoe, and, picking it up, slipped it into my pocket. Not until I had got into my bedroom and double-locked the door did I venture to take it out and examine it. One look was all I needed. It was Halsey's revolver. I had unpacked it the day before and put it on his shaving stand, and there could be no mistake. His name was on a small silver plate on the handle.

I seemed to see a network closing around my boy, innocent as I knew he was. The revolver—I am afraid of them, but anxiety gave me courage to look through the barrel—the revolver had still two bullets in it. I could only breathe a prayer of thankfulness that I had found the revolver before any sharp-eyed detective had come around.

I decided to keep what clues I had, the cuff-link, the golf stick and the revolver, in a secure place until I could see some reason for displaying them. The cuff-link had been dropped into a little filigree box on my toilet table. I opened the box and felt around for it. The box was empty—the cuff-link had disappeared!

CHAPTER V.

Gertrude's Engagement.

At ten o'clock the Casanova hack brought up three men. They introduced themselves as the coroner of the county and two detectives from the city. The coroner led the way at once to the locked wing, and with the aid of one of the detectives examined the rooms and the body. The other detective, after a short scrutiny of the dead man, busied himself with the outside of the house. It was only after they had got a fair idea of things as they were that they sent for me.

I received them in the living room, and I had made up my mind exactly what to tell. I had taken the house for the summer, I said, while the Armstrongs were in California. In spite of a rumor among the servants about strange noises—I cited Thomas—nothing had occurred the first two nights.

"One Look Was All I Needed."

On the third night I believed that some one had been in the house; I had heard a crashing sound, but being alone with one maid had not investigated. The house had been locked in the morning and apparently undisturbed.

Then, as clearly as I could, I related how, the night before, a shot had roused us; that my niece and I had investigated and found a body; that I did not know who the murdered man was until Mr. Jarvis from the club informed me, and that I knew of no reason why Mr. Arnold Armstrong should steal into his father's house at night. I should have been glad to allow him entree there at any time.

"Have you reason to believe, Miss Innes," the coroner asked, "that any member of your household, imagining Mr. Armstrong was a burglar, shot him in self-defense?"

"I have no reason for thinking so," I said quietly.

"Your theory is that Mr. Armstrong was followed here by some enemy and shot as he entered the house?"

"I don't think I have a theory," I said. "The thing that has puzzled me is why Mr. Armstrong should enter his father's house two nights in succession, stealing in like a thief, when he needed only to ask entrance to be admitted."

The coroner was a very silent man; he took some notes after this, but he seemed anxious to make the next train back to town. He set the inquest for the following Saturday, gave Mr. Jamieson, the younger of the two detectives, and the more intelligent looking, a few instructions, and, after gravely shaking hands with me and regretting the unfortunate affair, took his departure, accompanied by the other detective.

I was just beginning to breathe freely when Mr. Jamieson, who had been standing by the window, came over to me.

"The family consists of yourself alone, Miss Innes?"

"My niece is here," I said.

"There is no one but yourself and your niece?"

"My nephew." I had to moisten my lips.

"Oh, a nephew. I should like to see him, if he is here."

"He is not here just now," I said as quietly as I could. "I expect him—at any time."

"He was here yesterday evening, I believe?"

"No—yes."

"Didn't he have a guest with him? Another man?"

"He brought a friend with him to stay over Sunday, a Mr. Bailey."

"Mr. John Bailey, the cashier of the Traders' bank, I believe." And I knew that some one at the Greenwood club had told. "When did they leave?"

"Very early—I don't know at just what time."

Mr. Jamieson turned suddenly and looked at me.

"Please try to be more explicit," he said. "You say your nephew and Mr. Bailey were in the house last night, and yet you and your niece, with some women servants, found the body. Where was your nephew?"

I was entirely desperate by that time.

"I do not know," I cried, "but be sure of this: Halsey knows nothing of this thing, and no amount of circumstantial evidence can make an innocent man guilty."

"Sit down," he said, pushing forward a chair. "There are some things I have to tell you, and, in return, please tell me all you know. Believe me, things always come out. In the first place, Mr. Armstrong was shot from above. The bullet was fired at close range, entered below the shoulder and came out, after passing through the heart, well down the back. In other words, I believe the murderer stood on the stairs and fired down. In the second place, I found on the edge of the billiard table a charred cigar which had burned itself partly out, and a cigarette which had consumed itself to the cork tip. Neither one had been more than lighted, then put down and forgotten. Have you any idea what it was that made your nephew and Mr. Bailey leave their cigars and their game, take out the automobile without calling the chauffeur, and all that at—let me see—certainly before three o'clock in the morning?"

"I don't know," I said, "but depend on it, Mr. Jamieson, Halsey will be back himself to explain everything."

"I sincerely hope so," he said. "Miss Innes, has it occurred to you that Mr. Bailey might know something of this?"

Gertrude had come downstairs and just as he spoke she came in. I saw her stop suddenly, as if she had been struck.

"He does not," she said in a tone that was not her own. "Mr. Bailey and my brother know nothing of this. The murder was committed at three. They left the house at a quarter before three."

"How do you know that?" Mr. Jamieson asked oddly. "Do you know at what time they left?"

"I do," Gertrude answered firmly. "At a quarter before three my brother and Mr. Bailey left the house, by the main entrance. I—was—there."

"Gertrude," I said excitedly, "you are dreaming! Why, at a quarter to three—"

"Listen," she said. "At half-past two the downstairs telephone rang. I had not gone to sleep, and I heard it. Then I heard Halsey answer it, and in a few minutes he came upstairs and knocked at my door. We—we talked for a minute, then I put on my dressing gown and slippers, and went downstairs with him. Mr. Bailey was in the billiard room. We—we all talked together for perhaps ten minutes. Then it was decided that—that they should both go away—"

"Can't you be more explicit?" Mr. Jamieson asked. "Why did they go away?"

"I am only telling you what happened, not why it happened," she said evenly. "Halsey went for the car, and instead of bringing it to the house and rousing people, he went by the lower road from the stable. Mr. Bailey was to meet him at the foot of the lawn. Mr. Bailey left—"

"Which way?" Mr. Jamieson asked sharply.

"By the main entrance. He left—it was a quarter to three. I know exactly."

"The clock in the hall is stopped, Miss Innes," said Jamieson. Nothing seemed to escape him.

"He looked at his watch," she replied, and I could see Mr. Jamieson's eyes snap, as if he had made a discovery. As for myself, during the whole recital I had been plunged into the deepest amazement.

"Will you pardon me for a personal question?" The detective was a youngish man, and I thought he was somewhat embarrassed. "What are your—your relations with Mr. Bailey?"

Gertrude hesitated. Then she came over and put her hand lovingly in mine.

"I am engaged to marry him," she said simply.

I had grown so accustomed to surprises that I could only gasp again, and as for Gertrude, the hand that lay in mine was burning with fever.

"And—after that," Mr. Jamieson went on, "you went directly to bed?"

Gertrude hesitated.

"No," she said finally. "I—I am not nervous, and after I had extinguished the light, I remembered something I had left in the billiard room, and I felt my way back there through the darkness."

"Will you tell me what it was you had forgotten?"

"I cannot tell you," she said slowly. "I—I did not leave the billiard room at once—"

"Why?" The detective's tone was imperative. "This is very important, Miss Innes."

"I was crying," Gertrude said in a low tone. "When the French clock in the drawing room struck three I got up and then—I heard a step on the east porch, just outside the cardroom. Some one with a key was working with the latch, and I thought, of course, of Halsey. When we took the house he called that his entrance, and he had carried a key for it ever since. The door opened and I was about to ask what he had forgotten, when there was a flash and a report. Some heavy body dropped, and, half crazed with terror and shock, I ran through the drawing room and got upstairs—I scarcely remember how."

She dropped into a chair, and I thought Mr. Jamieson must have finished. But he was not through.

"You certainly clear your brother and Mr. Bailey admirably," he said. "The testimony is invaluable, especially in view of the fact that your brother and Mr. Armstrong had, I believe, quarreled rather seriously some time ago."

"Nonsense," I broke in. "Things are bad enough, Mr. Jamieson, without inventing bad feeling where it doesn't exist. Gertrude, I don't think Halsey knew the—the murdered man, did he?"

But Mr. Jamieson was sure of his ground.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

King Arthur's Round Table.

Although the work of excavating the Roman amphitheater popularly known as King Arthur's Round Table at Caerleon, Monmouthshire, has only been in progress a few days, some very interesting discoveries have been made. The most striking undoubtedly is that of the two piers of the southern gateway through which the chariots passed into the arena.

The gateway is nine feet six inches in width, and the walls are of characteristic Roman work, with massive stones still looking as if they would last for centuries. From the upper to the lower wall must have stretched beams of wood or connecting walls on which sloping lines of seats were built, there being room, it is estimated, for 11 tiers giving seating capacity for between 4,000 and 5,000 spectators.—London Evening Standard.

One Mr. Thackeray.

The plaintiff in the theatrical libel case explained that she adopted the name of Walker because she liked it better than that of Thackeray. It must be embarrassing, no doubt, to be in continued danger of the funny man's question, "How the Dickens do you come to have such a name?" But one Mr. Thackeray, whom Lord Melbourne, when his mind was becoming weak, met one day in a railway carriage, must have had even stranger reasons for wishing he had some other name. "Pray sir," asked Melbourne, "are you the Mr. Thackeray who invented brass locks?" "No," said the stranger. "Are you the Mr. Thackeray who wrote 'Vanity Fair'?" "No." "Then what the —— Mr. Thackeray are you?"—London Chronicle.

In Accordance with Scripture.

A Boer had sold to a mission Kaffir the carcass of an ox that had died from lung sickness. The missionary remonstrated with him, and threatened to report him to the authorities. The Boer expressed his surprise at such language from a missionary, saying he had acted strictly according to Scriptural precept. The missionary said he would not say another word if the Boer could justify his act from the Bible. The Boer thereupon asked for a Bible and, referring to Deut. 14:21, read as follows:

"Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it to the stranger that is within thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien."

A New Sun-Defying Cloth.

A new cloth is being made in Calcutta, India, which is manufactured on scientific principles to conform to nature's plan of warding off the sun's rays, as exemplified in the color of the skin and the pigments under the skin. It is the belief of physicians that one of the chief reasons for the many deaths recorded in hot weather is that of improper clothing. The designers of what we must wear to be of the elect may ordain a color or texture thoroughly unsuited to the prevailing climatic conditions, and safety and comfort are often jeopardized in consequence.—Van Norden Magazine.

ONE REASON FOR STATUES

Not Altogether Devoid of Common Sense Was Answer Given to Inquisitive Child.

A Washington dentist praised enthusiastically the respect paid to the memory of Horace Wells by the French government. It has erected recently a statue of him in the Place des Etats Unis, in Paris, and the unveiling ceremony in March was attended by distinguished scientists from all over the world.

"Professor Wells," said the dentist, "was born in Hartford in 1815. He was a pioneer in the use of nitrous oxide gas in dental operations to prevent pain, and for his discoveries in anaesthesia he may be regarded as a benefactor to mankind.

"Wells has been dead 50 years, and France is the first—a tardy first—to acknowledge the importance of his discovery, and raise a tribute to his almost forgotten memory. This case reminds me of a conversation between a little boy and his father.

"'Why are statues erected to famous men, father,' said the child.

"'So that they may become known, dear,' was the answer."

A Cynical Synonym.

"Poor Myra Kelley," said a magazine editor at the Authors' club in New York, "was almost as distressed as Mr. Carnegie at the spirit of graft and crookedness rampant among us.

"The young writer, at a dinner of magazine contributors, said that we worshiped wealth—that was our trouble. Then she crystallized her meaning in an anecdote.

"She said that one man asked another:

"'What position does Blank hold in the community?'

"'A very honorable position,' was the reply.

"'Is he wealthy?'

"'Wealth and honor,' said the other, 'are synonymous terms in America today.'"

At the Bovine Faucets.

"I sent my little boy on his first visit to the country last week," said a Washington Heights milk dealer. "Although my boyhood was passed on the old farm, Willie has grown to the age of eight in the city. He had been watching Uncle Hezekiah milk the cow on his first evening, and when he returned to the house his aunt asked him:

"'Is Uncle Hezzie through milking yet, Willie?'

"'Not yet,' answered Willie. 'He has finished two faucets and has just begun on the other two.'"

OLD LADY'S THOUGHTFUL ACT

Didn't Mean Beloved Pastor's Digestion Should Suffer if She Could Help It.

One morning, a popular young minister was presenting his views upon an important subject under discussion, says the National Monthly, and insisting that he held certain things to be true, the commentators notwithstanding. He contended, "I hold this to be true, even though the commentators disagree with me—and again—I say, even though the commentators disagree with me."

At this point an old lady was seen to leave the church. On his way home from the service the minister was met by this old lady, bearing a basket. She stopped and handed it to him, saying: "Dear brother, I heerd you say thet common-taters disagree with you, so I've brought you a basket of Virginia yams."

His Excellence.

"I tell you," said one man to another as they emerged from the dimly lighted corridor of a concert hall, "I envy that fellow who was singing."

"Envy him!" echoed the other. "Well, if I were going to envy a singer I'd select somebody with a better voice. His was about the poorest I ever heard."

"It's not his voice I envy, man," was the reply. "It's his tremendous courage."—Ladies' Home Journal.

GNAT CAUSES PELLAGRA.

Committee on Disease in Europe Says Corn Is Not to Blame.

London, May 14.—Dr. Sambon, a member of the Field committee which has been investigating the disease pellagra, telegraphs from Rome that the committee has definitely proved that maize or Indian corn is not the cause of pellagra.

The committee finds that the parasitic conveyor of the disease is the "simulium reptans," a species of biting gnat.

The Business Instinct.

An English farmer, taking his little son with him, was going to the polling station to give his vote. On the way he met a friend on the same errand, and the two entered into conversation. After an excited and heated argument about the budget they came to blows. The poor lad was much frightened, and, seeing that his father was getting the worst of it, suddenly called out to him:

"Hit him in the watch, father; that'll cost him something!"

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (800 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly

70,000 Americans

will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, and good railways.

Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

Don't Kill the Toad.

Prof. Washburn of the Minnesota division of Entomology at University Farm finds toads to be friends of the farmer. They feed entirely upon an incredible number of insects. The federal department of agriculture, investigating the toad, discovers the startling fact that in twenty-four hours the insect food consumed by one toad equals in quantity four times the capacity of its stomach, which is practically filled and emptied four times every twenty-four hours. One hundred fifty-nine stomachs examined by the department showed a content of 19 per cent of ants; 16 per cent of cut worms; 10 per cent of thousand legged worms; 9 per cent caterpillars; 8 per cent of ground beetles; 5 per cent of destructive weevles; 3 per cent of grasshoppers, together with crickets, spiders, sow bugs, potato bugs and a miscellaneous lot of other insects. Protect the toad. Teach the thoughtless boy friendliness to this helpless, harmless, useful animal.

The Pocket Gopher.

Bisulphide of carbon on a piece of burlap or oakum, thrown quickly down a pocket gopher's burrow, preferably when the soil is moist, Prof. Washburn, Minnesota entomologist, says has killed many pocket gophers in his experiment work. He uses half a pint of bisulphide at a burrow. The chemical costs at wholesale is about eight cents a pint. Its gas is very poisonous, heavier than air, penetrates the burrow, and causes death by suffocation. The openings must be completely closed with dirt to prevent air going in. Do not use matches or a light when using bisulphide. It is dangerously explosive. Resort to strychnine has sometimes been had. A little on a piece of potato, pushed far down the hole with a stick so that no scent of the hand is left in the earth, has killed many.

Fight Quack Grass Now.

Get to work now on the small patches of quack grass. Set them apart for special attention during the rest of the summer. Keep the underground stems from being dragged to other parts of the field. If the patches are two large to smother with tar paper dig up the grass, shake out the roots and underground stems carefully, and haul them from the field and burn. A five or six-tined fork will be found a valuable tool for this work. If dead the roots and stems may be plowed under to increase fertility. Look the patches over every week to catch any plants that may have been left or that may have developed. These patches may be planted to any cultivated crops. For management of large patches or fields of quack grass see Minnesota Press Bulletin No. 36.

Seed Corn Week, Sept. 19th-24th, 1910.

Are you really interested in having better seed corn for next season? Would you be willing to assist in boosting the reputation of our state along the line of production and particularly along the line of corn? Could you be counted on to co-operate with the extension division by saving your seed corn early this season and urging your neighbors to do the same?

We need to make this "seed corn week" a state-wide movement.

Reports received at the Minnesota Experiment Station at St. Anthony Park from Minnesota Farmers who raise large yields of corn and potatoes show that the cultivation of corn immediately after planting (when it may be done deeply) and kept up as long as possible in the season, gives the best yields and best quality of grain. Cultivate shallow, not more than one to two inches deep, after the roots begin to grow.

The Old Method of Cultivating corn was to go over the field with a drag when the corn was just coming up. This method is no longer recommended by the Minnesota department of agriculture. Modern methods at University Farm, St. Anthony Park, are the use of the cultivator and deep stirring of the earth as soon as planting is over, and shallow cultivation when the roots have started.

Bull Thistles, Common In Pastures, cannot always be killed by mowing. Mowing tends to prevent maturity of seed. Cutting off the thistles just below the surface of the ground, two or three times a year, will effectually eradicate them. Working the ground in rotation of grass, grain and corn is a very sure way of eradicating weeds.

Strawberries.—The Minnesota Experiment Station has had best results by cultivating the strawberries set out in the spring, and by picking off all blossoms that appear during the first year. Fruiting the first season weakens the plants. The Station keeps the runners in the row where they will take root and form new plants.

Kill the weeds in the corn and potatoes. Weeds take up moisture the crops need and prevent the circulation of air thus encouraging the spread of plant diseases. They shade the ground and keep the soil from absorbing heat—an important factor in corn growth.

Cultivate Corn Often to save soil moisture is advised by the Minnesota Experiment Station.

Spraying of Dandelions.

For the past two years iron sulphate has been used at the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station for the eradication of dandelions in lawns. Fairly good success has resulted from these experiments. Although spraying the dandelions does not by any means mean absolute destruction of this pest, it at least kills many of the flowering stalks and keeps hundreds of dandelions from coming to seed. It also kills many of the younger plants. If one were to spray a lawn carefully for an entire season the result would possibly warrant the time and expense connected with the spraying. Iron sulphate at the rate of 1½ pounds to 1 gallon of water is the proper proportion to use on the lawns. The spray should be applied with a sprayer which gives a very fine, mist-like spray. Apply the solution about three days after the lawn is cut, on a day that is bright and warm. The grass will be somewhat blackened but little damage results. Some of the white clover, owing to its broad leaf is somewhat injured. The lawn should be sprayed about once a month. Care should be taken when spraying to keep the solution off of the cement walks as it discolors them.

Cut Worm Destruction.

The State Entomologist, Prof. F. L. Washburn, says that some relief may be had from cut worms by the use of poisoned baits, made and applied as follows: Make a bran mash, sweeten with molasses or brown sugar, and add enough Paris green to make it a decided green color. A big tablespoonful of this placed at intervals among the plants, just at nightfall, will attract the cut worms, and kill a large number. These baits should not be put too close to the plants for fear rain will wash the Paris green against the plants and injure them. Cut worms do not die immediately upon taking this poison, but it is sure death after a few hours. Traps, consisting of pieces of board, placed about the garden, may be used, under which the cut worms will be found in the morning. Some birds prey upon them, and various parasites and predaceous insects attack them. In the case of field crops, where it is possible, frequent cultivation will turn the worms up, enabling birds and other enemies to prey upon them.

Another Less Than a Dollar Dinner.

Four college girls of Miss Shepperd's senior class in domestic science gave the last of the class dinners, of the college year, recently, in the Domestic Science Building, at the Experiment Station, at St. Anthony Park. Six guests were present. Following is the menu: First course—Tomato soup, croutons; second, stuffed heart, potato puff, lima beans, Parker House rolls, mint ice; third, Waldorf salad, pastry sticks; fourth, Rhubarb pie, cream meringue, coffee, cream, sugar. The cost was 99½ cents, or a little over 16 cents for each person. In the college dining hall the meals cost each student at this season of the year 15 cents, but the actual cost of the food, eaten is about 8 cents.

Fodder Corn.—At the Minnesota Experiment Station it is thought that fodder corn may be planted this year up to the 10th or 15th of June. It will yield several more tons per acre than hay. Harrow the field smooth, sow the corn in drills three feet to three feet eight inches apart and the kernels from one to two inches apart in the row. Fodder corn may be harrowed until it is two or three inches high, but harrowing this must not be construed as suggesting the harrowing of field corn. Such harrowing is regarded at the Station as bad practice. Cultivate the fodder corn every week through the growing season.

The Minnesota Experiment Station does not recommend the killing of an animal for the purpose of human food within twenty-four hours after feeding. When an animal is on full feed it is impossible to thoroughly drain the veins. Food in the stomach rapidly decomposes after the animal is killed, and the gases generated often flavor the meat disagreeably. Water, however, may be given up to the time of slaughter. It keeps the temperature normal and helps to wash the effete matter out of the system. A nicely colored carcass results.

The Division of Botany and Plant Pathology has just prepared a novel weed seed collection of twenty-four seeds, including seeds of quack grass, Canada thistle, mustard, etc. The collection is now on sale. Price 50c to farmers of this state, and 75c to nonresidents. Send orders to Cashier, Minnesota Experiment Station, St. Paul, Minn.

The Experiment station at University Farm has never been able to discover a way of telling, before placing in an incubator or under a hen, whether an egg will hatch or if it will produce a rooster or pullet.

In setting hens, or in incubating artificially, the Minnesota Experiment station has found best results by selecting eggs of a uniform size, with smooth shell and as perfectly formed as possible.

Reasoning of Youthful Mind.

A schoolmistress whose hair was of the blackest hue, was one day giving a lesson on a coal mine to a class in Suffolk, England. To make the lesson interesting as possible she went on to say she had herself been in a coal mine. A little lad put up his hand, and when pointed to said: "Please, teacher, is that what made your hair so black?"

Up to Pa.

"Papa, sister's a liar!"

"Why, why! Jennie, you mustn't say such things."

"I can prove it by your own self. Last night I heard her say, 'Charlie, I'll call papa if you dare to do it again!' And he did it twice more. Did you hear her call?"

Rather Personal.

Shortman—Do you mean to insinuate that I am a fool?

Tallman—Certainly not.

Shortman—Well, I didn't know. I've been married twice.

An Average.

"Doesn't it annoy you to be baldheaded?"

"Not at all," replied the genial citizen. "When we go out evenings my wife wears more than enough hair for two."

Still a Chance.

"Have you ever loved and lost?" asked the sweet young thing.

"Not yet," replied the man who had been divorced three times.

FEED CHILDREN

On Properly Selected Food. It Pays Big Dividends.

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes saying: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh stewed, or canned, some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to realize the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk, and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

16 YEARS OF SKIN DISEASE

"For sixteen long years I have been suffering with a bad case of skin disease. While a child there broke out a red sore on the legs just in back of my knees. It waxed from bad to worse, and at last I saw I had a bad skin disease. I tried many widely known doctors in different cities but to no satisfactory result. The plague bothered me more in warm weather than in winter and being on my leg joints it made it impossible for me to walk, and I was forced to stay indoors in the warmest weather. My hopes of recovery were by this time spent. Sleepless nights and restless days made life an unbearable burden. At last I was advised to try the Cuticura remedies [Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills] and I did not need more than a trial to convince me that I was on the road of success this time. I bought two sets of the Cuticura Remedies and after these were gone I was a different man entirely. I am now the happiest man that there is at least one true cure for skin diseases. Leonard A. Hewtof, 11 Nostrand Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., July 30 and Aug. 8, '09."

A Child's View.

Scarlet fever was in the house next door and a little girl of eight had listened to the recital of what was happening. A caller came and the child attempted to entertain the stranger until her mother came into the drawing room.

She told about the trouble next door, but in the telling "broke in" and "broke out" got tangled in her child-brain.

"Johnny's got scarlet fever, because his face is all red and his chest is broken in!" she announced.

Jimmy's Definition.

"What is geography?" asked the father, who was testing his son's progress in study.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

The Overland
The King of Cars

No other car has so large a sale—none has made such amazing records. Price, $1000 up.

It requires four factories, employing 4,000 men—turning out 140 Overlands daily—to meet the flood-like demand for these cars. Yet two years ago a hundred rivals had a larger sale.

The reason lies largely in the car's utter simplicity. Its able designer made it almost trouble-proof.

He created an engine which, for endurance, is the marvel of engineering.

He designed the pedal control. One goes forward or backward, slow or fast, by merely pushing pedals. The hands have nothing to do but steer.

A child can master the car in ten minutes. A novice can drive it a thousand miles without any thought of trouble.

The Overland always keeps going, and almost cares for itself. All the usual complexities have been eliminated.

That is why each car sells others, and our orders for this year's Overlands amount to $24,000,000.

Another fact is that no other car gives nearly so much for the money. This is due to our enormous output, and the fortunes invested in our automatic machinery. It would bankrupt a smaller maker to try to compete with us.

You can get a 25-horsepower Overland, with a 102-inch wheel base, for $1,000. You can get a 40-horsepower Overland, with a 112-inch wheel base, for $1,250. The prices include lamps and magneto.

This car, which has captured the country, is the car you will want when you know it.

He complimented the county on the splendid structure now in course of construction and stated that if the county was divided the tax payers would regret it. He has had a little experience as he has a piece of land that is now in Koochiching County and was formerly a part of Itasca County. While his land was in Itasca County his taxes were from $9.45 to $9.55 a year and now his taxes in Koochiching County for the past three years have been from $27.00 to 28.00 per year.

POWER AND LIGHT PLANT SOLD AGAIN

Local Property Purchased by H. M. Byllesby & Company, a Chicago Corporation.

Large Amount to be Expended in Improvements—Plans Being Prepared.

The water power and light plant recently sold by the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company to the Red River Power company of Grand Forks and Crookston has been sold by the last named company to H. M. Byllesby & Company, Chicago, a large corporation owning many similar properties. The company recently purchased the plant at Fargo, N. D., from J. J. Hill and his son and also the one at Stillwater, Minn., and they own several others.

In the deal involving the transfer of the local plant is the dam and power house and local lighting system, the dam site and properties at Louisville and the gas and electric light plant at Grand Forks.

The Red River Power company had made elaborate plans for improvements to be made here and already purchased material for the work and work was to have been commenced soon. However, the purchasing company plan improvements on a larger scale. Plans for the work are now being prepared. It is not known exactly what improvements are to be made or when the work is to be done, though it is known that the company is building for the future, that big improvements are to be made and that in Red Lake Falls and vicinity hundreds of thousands of dollars will be expended.

Mr. Roycraft, who has been manager of the plant at Grand Forks for a number of years, will continue in that capacity and will also have supervision of the local plant.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET

County Option Advocates Made Big Showing in State Convention.

In the Republican state convention held at St. Paul Tuesday O. A. Eberhart was nominated for governor by acclamation. Other candidates placed in nomination were:

Lieutenant Governor—S. Y. Gordon, Browns Valley.

Secretary of State—Julius A. Schmahl, Redwood Falls.

State Auditor—S. J. Iverson, Rushford.

Attorney General—Geo. T. Simpson, Winona.

State Treasurer—Walter J. Smith, Eveleth.

Clerk of Supreme Court—J. A. Caswell, Anoka.

Associate Justice Supreme Court—E. A. Jaggard, St. Paul; P. E. Brown, Luverne; C. L. Brown, Morris; D. F. Simpson, Minneapolis.

Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner—C. H. Staples, St. Paul.

Senator Moses E. Clapp was unanimously nominated to succeed himself as United States senator.

A county option plank proposed in a minority report of the committee on resolutions, failed of adoption by a vote of 435 to 638. However, the nomination of Gordon for lieutenant governor is considered as a recognition of the strength of the county option people.

LEO KELLEY DEAD

Nephew of Ed. Enright Passed Away Recently.

Shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday morning, Leo Kelly, the 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Kelly, of this city, breathed his last, tuberculosis being the cause of death. The young lad had been a sufferer with the dread disease for a number of months, but within the last few weeks he showed great improvement and his parents were making plans to send him to California, in the hopes that the change of climate would bring back his health. Death came as an interrupter of their plans, however.

All day Thursday he showed improvement, feeling in the best of spirits, but that night he was taken with a sinking spell and continued to grow worse until death relieved him of his sufferings yesterday morning.

Growing up from infancy in this city as he did, Leo was well known and liked throughout the city. He was one of the popular boys of the school, and his fellow students will mourn his loss as only boys can. In school he showed himself both scholarly and manly, and it was with deep regret that his teacher and classmates learned that he was forced to leave school about a year ago.

The sympathy of the entire community will go out to Mr. and Mrs. Kelly and the three brothers, Arthur, Howard and Bearnie, in their loss. The funeral will be held from Sacred Heart Catholic church at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, Rev. Father Jas. Hogan officating.

The foregoing was taken from the East Grand Forks department of the Grand Forks Herald. The deceased was a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Enright and they were at East Grand Forks for the funeral. The young lad had often visited here and had many friends who will be pained to learn of his death. He had been feeling much better of late and had planned to come here for a visit soon. For that reason the announcement of his death came as a surprise and shock to relatives and friends.

The above obituary was intended for publication some time ago but was inadvertently omitted.

PAUL PRY IS A GOOD GUESSER

He Tells Things in Advance About Republican Convention.

Tells of Endorsement of Administration With Machine in Control.

St. Paul, June 21—Before this letter is in print the Republican state convention will have passed into history, and it is hardly worth while to risk one's reputation as a political prophet to forecasts its proceedings. Nevertheless it is already apparent enough that it has been decided to ignore all questions on which there is any principal involved and to give the administration that endorsement which may mean anything or nothing as local exigencies may require. However principals in general are not matters which greatly concern those who have undertaken to manipulate the convention. What they are after is fat jobs and fatter patronage.

The Machine In Control.

The primaries held throughout the state and the county convention resulting from them illustrates the advantage which flows from a familiarity with the game. Everywhere it is the men who knew how who got there. It was those to whom it was worth while who shaped things. Progressive Republicans and insurgents who not only had no organizaton but who were organized against had no show. The result was that the convention was representative not of the views of the rank and file of Republicans in harmony with the state organization who had something to gain. Such representation as the people want they must look for at the polls.

Bossing a Party.

The tendency is all that way. Take the attitude of the leaders at Washington. They make no pretense of regarding the Republican party as composed of and directed by republican voters. The republican party to them means the Republican administration and those members of congress who have the whip handard direct party activities. Thus Dolliver and Cummins of Iowa, LaFollette of Wisconsin and Clapp of Minnesota have been read out of the Republican party, as for as the they can be read out by the Republican leaders, not because they have tried, with a measureable degree of success, to shape legislation in accordance with what is believed to be the wishes of the Republican voters, but in opposition to those who assume to be the national leaders. The program of those leaders acting in concert with the leaders in this and other states, is to dragoon the Republican voters into supporting candidates who, like Tawney, have more or less openly defied the wishes of their constitutes in order to maintain party solidarity, and to sanction such measures as the tariff of which it is known they disapprove. This program in some states may be successfully carried out. Then again it may not. If this is really a government of the people, by the people and for the people some illusions are likely to be dispelled. There has in this state heretofore been evidenced on the part of the votes a disposition to take the bit in their mouths and to disregard orders from those higher up. We may have examples of this kind.

What Republicans say of Their Party.

When Pinchot and Garfield were here a week ago they put out a plain line of talk. According to these men, one of whom has been cabinet minister and the other high in the confidence of perhaps the most widely popular president the nation ever had, the present administration officered by members of the party to which they belong has been turned over, bound hand and foot to interests. These are not Democarts who say this. They are republican to the manor born. With the consent of the president, Pinchot charges, the secretary of the interior is so manipulating the affairs of his office that favored monopolists are exploiting the natural resources of the country to their own advantage. As directed by the Republican administration the conservation policy is a fraud and a sham. In making the tariff, according to Mr. Pinchot, the people were deliberately and designedly betrayed into the hands of the trusts who are the only beneficiaries of Republican tariff legislation. That is the doctrine reached by these men known to be high in the confidence of President Roosevelt. Yet the Minnesota republican platform endorses the administration of President Taft, root and branch, and in the Minneapolis convention it was resolved, according to a platform prepared by a federal officeholder, that 'We heartily endorse and warmly commend the administration of President William Howard Taft. We believe that his administration for the last fourteen months has renewed prosperity throughout the country, and has established confidence at home and abroad."

This really is quite a remarkable document when you come to analyze it. President Taft did not succeed a Democratic executive. He succeeded Theodore Roosevelt. Was it necessary at the close of Roosevelt's administration to renew prosperity? Was it necessary to establish confidence? Mr. Grimshaw says it was and what Mr. Grimshaw doesn't know is scarcely worth inquiring about. Then whose confidence was to be established at home? Certainly not the confidence of the plain people of the United States. Roosevelt enjoyed that in heaping measure. Which brings us back to what Marshall Grimsaw realy meant. Roosevelt did not have the confidence of that happy band of corporation attorneys who comprise Taft's cabinet. He did not have the confidence of Wall Street, which lived in constant dread of what he would do next. He did not have the cofidence of Aldrich and Cannon. Tawneyhe had accorded membership in the Ananias club and their feelings were reciprocal. In a message to congress he openly denounced both Tawney and Smith of Iowa, a rival for the speakership, as pursuing a course detrimental to the public interest. Roosevelt did not have the confidence in fact of any of the congressional reactionaries who lost no opportunities to set pitfalls for his feet and to block the Roosevelt policies. All Roosevelt ever got out of the congressional reactionaries he hammered out of them with a big stick. But Taft has "re-established confidence." Really Mr. Grimshaw should be publicly, thanked for the happy phrase. For Taft is in with the men Roosevelt was out with. Roosevet's friends have been dismissed from public service. For which Marshall Grimshaw gives thanks. It is as well to let it go at that. It is the keynote of the rejoicing among the republican leaders here as elsewhere. The party is reunited, in token of which the fatted calf of the tariff was prepared for the delectation of those who feast when the republican table is laid.

The Battle Still to Come.

In the preliminary conferences among republican delegates before the conventon met the absence of an old time enthusiasm was quite marked. Of course all the repulicans were for Eberhart for the nomination. No one however, was observed shouting their heads off for him. In perhaps the majority of cases they appeared to be for the governor with the mental reservation, that when it comes to the election then another story. They weren't sayng much about that. They would wait to see what the democrats would do. They seemed to be pretty well assured of what that would be. They didn't see how Lind would get away from the nominaton. In case he was nominated and accepted, even the men who are most interested in the election of a republican gorvernor admitted that that was only the beginning. Frank Eddy expressed the general view very well. "Well," he said, "I guess Eberhart's luck is going to carry him through. "But," it was objected, "what if Lind is nominated "That" said Frank, "is a different prapostion. "If my observation is woth anything and in the past year have been pretty much over the state, am afraid if Lind is nominatd, Eberhart's luck will desert him him."

FARMERS SHOULD THINK ABOUT THIS

What Representation Would They Have if Red Lake County is Divided.

Farmers of Proposed Pennington Could Pay the Price and See the Show.

Several Red Lake Falls people, it doesn't matter who, went to Thief River Falls last Friday to attend an alleged Republican county convention. The supposed purpose of this convention was to elect delegates to represent Red Lake county in the state convention. Thief River Falls people were in the majority so they elected a chairman and then chose ten delegates to represent Thief River Falls at the state cronvention. Seven of the delegates were residents of Thief River Falls, the other three were chosen to represent the vast territory of the northern half of Red Lake county. Southern Red Lake county was without representaton. The suggestion that there ought to be a representative delegation from Red Lake county did not receive any response and the program was sheepishly pushed through and the meeting hurridly adjourned.

It was such a clever little scheme. That no doubt is that Brother John thinks and everybody is glad he is happy, but the good Red Lake Falls Republicans who thought they were attending a county convention are still wondering how anyone except possibly a man of John's capacity, could get any satisfaction out of the transaction.

Seven to three—that's the proportion of representation that the people of Thief River Falls say the city and the rest of the territory comprising the proposed county of Pennington will be entitled to. They are saying that now before the vote on the division proposition—seven to three. No doubt if division carries, when they will have the power to do anything they please, they'll tell the reservation farmers to come into the city and help run things.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS INVESTIGATION

It Developed Many Things That Were Not Expected by People Interested.

So the Wheels of Justice Slipped a Cog and the Investigation Ended.

Several weeks ago the city council of Thief River Falls, apparently angered at certain remarks [illegible] upon the streets relative to one of its prominent members, ordered an investigation, commanded the citizens who had passed the remarks to appear before it at a time set and tell what they knew or be chastised by the gentleman most concerned who, it was claimed by some, had acquired the pleasant habit of running things to suit him [illegible] two or three others, [illegible] with the crooked name. It was not supposed that these otherwise quiet citizens would have the nerve to appear and beard the lion in his own special jungle, but they did not only appear with proof, but also employed an attorney to investigate the city records and books, and represent them at the hearing, with the result that the large crowd in attendance was greatly edified, and the council refused to hear all the proof that was tendered them.

Grave irregularities in the conduct of city affairs were discovered affecting other city officials than the one in question, and one or more ex-councilmen. Some of the city officers seemed to consider their pockets a safer place for city money than the city treasurer's safe. Record proof of these matters were tendered the council at the hearing, but they declined to receive them, one alderman saying that they "knew all about that already."

The meeting finally adjourned without further action, and a deep silence has reigned over Thief River Falls ever since. Although the reporters of both Thief River papers are said to have attended the hearing, not a word of the matter appeared in their papers.

Is this a sample of the way Pennington county would be run?

A Pittsburg police captain has solved a mystery by declaring that the alleged epidemic of hydrophobia among dogs is really only a form of intoxication; speeding chauffeurs and dogs, says he, are made drunk by inhaling the fumes of gasoline. Soon we may look for either speedmania or hydrophobia among birds.

The proposed new county of Pennington held a Republican county convention last Friday. The Thief River partisans refused to permit the election of a single delegate from the southern part. This may be a good way to exhibit petty spite, but it isn't the best way to forward the Republican party. If Thief River thinks it essential to furnish all the delegates they might as well go ahead and furnish all the votes.

Northern Minnesota's demand for legislative reapportionment has become so strong that it is doubtful whether either of the two leading political parties will consider it policy to turn a deaf ear to clamor from the northern residents any longer, says the Glencoe Enterprise. A reapportionment bill, however, will by no means be an easy matter to get through the legislature unless it provides that the house be enlarged so as to give each county a member, and leaves the senate representation untouched.

Senators Hughes of Colorado and Heyburn of Idaho are opposed to the conservation policy on the grounds that it is retarding the progress of the West. Hughes said it would take 900 years to mine out the coal in Colorado alone, and added that the conservation policy would make mollycoddles out of future generations. If the public were reasonably assured that Hughes, Heyburn and others of their kind, were less solicitous about the welfare of the interests that are plundering the national resources, and more in sympathy with the just claims of the people as a whole to the heirship of God's favors, there might be more of a disposition to view their utterances with respect.

When the Passion Play at Oberamergau was in progress ten years ago an American visitor spent much of his spare time looking up the actors in their homes and chatting with them about the play. One complaint he met almost everywhere was the tremendous fatigue the performers suffered at the close of the 8-hour performance. Coming to the home of Hans Zwink, the Judas of the play, he found the painter-actor in quite a cheerful mode. "Does the performance fatigue you so much, too?" the tourist inquired. Ere Herr Zwink could reply his little 1-year old son chirped up: "Pa, he don't get so tired. He hangs himself at 3 o'clock and comes home two hours before the others."

More than $10,000,000 was paid by the people of Minnesota for life insurance during 1910 and more than $4,000,000 of this was returned in the form of death claims according to the preliminary report just issued by the state insurance department. EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Albert Lea Standard: Why, oh why, cannot the people who believe in and want good government, cast aside party prejudice, get together and compel the plutocrats and political pirates to flock by themselves?

Long Prairie Argus: The leaders of the state Democracy are hesitating as to wether they had better nominate John Lind and lose the support of the saloon interests, or take Hammond and make the fight on the tariff. But whatever the leaders may think about it, the average Democratic voter is for John Lind—whisky or no whiskey.

Middle River Pioneer: If the members of the next legislature stand together in their demands with the unity manifested at the big Crookston convention, they can put through anything within reason that they demand. And, they will have to stand together in the demands of the resolutions of the convention, or their names will be Dennis in future campaigns.

Sandstone Courier: The second great meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association was held at Crookston last week and it was a hummer. It shows that the people in this part of the state are just waking up to a realization of what can be accomplished for their own good, when all get together and work for it. These meetings will be kept up until their demands are answered and each one will be larger and better than the one before.

Winona Independent: The regulars controlled the Wisconsin state convention by a big majority, and the general plea was for party harmony and faith in President Taft. But what advantage is there in party harmony, when it means the despoiling of the consumer for the benefit of the big manufacturing interests? And how can an intelligent voter have faith in a president whose every move so far stamps him as a failure?

Northfield News: A Kentucky jury has rendered a verdict of guilty against 12 farmers charged with violating the Sherman anti-trust law. The farmers had agreed not to sell their tobacco to the tobacco trust for the price it was willing to pay, and had solicited other farmers to join them. That may be a good law, but it seems that farmers, who are up against combinations of one kind or another pretty much all the time, cannot themselves combine.

Elk River Star-News: Reapportionment is a vital issue with Northern Minnesota and in all fairness it should be granted, and right here it seems pertinent to say that it rests largely with Northern Minnesota itself whether they get it or not. We are convinced that there is enough of the spirit of fairness in Southern Minnesota to grant this right if the politicians of the northern part of the state would only get together in a solid body back of the proposition. Senators are elected for four-year terms this fall and every candidate should be pledged in writing to favor the proposition, it only needs a very few votes, but if the matter is properly put up to the southern solons, we are convinced that enough votes could be secured for a proper measure to carry it through.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Rheumatism is a specific blood fermentation, a souring of the circulation from an excess of uric acid accumulating in the blood stream. This uratic impurity comes usually as a result of constipation, weak kidneys, indigestion and stomach disturbances. These systemic irregularities may not be of marked severity or of long duration, but each has a direct effect on the eliminative members of the body, which prevents the proper removal of the waste products. This refuse remains in the stomach and bowels, and souring forms uric acid, which the blood quickly absorbs.

Rheumatism is usually manifested in the joints and muscles. It is here its sharpest twinges of pain are felt, and stiffening of ligaments and tendons first commence. The pain of Rheumatism is caused by the contact of the sensory nerves with the gritty, acrid formation which uric acid causes to accumulate in the corpuscles of the blood about the joints. The stiffening of muscles and joints is usually gradual. Constantly the blood deposits the uric acid into the joints, and slowly the natural fluids are dried up and destroyed. Then Rheumatism becomes chronic and serious. Rheumatism is sometimes inherited, for like all blood diseases it can be transmitted to offspring. This explains why some persons are afflicted with the disease, and suffer its pains, who have otherwise been perfectly healthy.

S.S.S. cures Rheumatism and cures it permanently. It goes into the circulation, and removes the uric acid, purifies the blood, and in this way destroys the cause. S.S.S. changes the blood from a sour, acid-steeped stream to a rich, healthy fluid, which quiets the excited nerves, eases the throbbing muscles and painful joints, and filters out of the circulation the irritating matter which causes every painful symptom of the disease. When the blood has been purified and enriched by S.S.S., it nourishes the different members that have been weakened and starved because of imperfect blood. RHEUMATISM FORTY YEARS.

I suffered with lumbago for a long time, and speaking of it to a friend one day he told me to try S. S. S. I did so, and soon found it was helping me. I had rheumatism for more than forty years, having contracted it in the army, but S. S. S cured me sound and well, and have had no return of the trouble. I think S.S.S. has no equal for curing rheumatism.

COMPLETE TEXT OF RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at Crookston Meeting of Northern Minnesota Development Association.

The [illegible] adopted by the Northern Minnesota Development Congress [illegible]

[illegible] from thirty-one counties of Northern Minnesota, in convention [illegible] at the city of Crookston, [illegible] 1910, composing the Northern Minnesota Development [illegible] that in Northern [illegible] development of natural [illegible] such as no [illegible] and to the end [illegible] to specify [illegible] hereby adopt the [illegible]

[illegible] the representation of the [illegible] in the state [illegible] to be wholly [illegible] in view of the [illegible] population of that part [illegible] compared with other [illegible]

[illegible] condition is contrary to the letter and spirit of [illegible] of the State of Minnesota [illegible] to every principle of right [illegible]

[illegible] That this association [illegible] that a just [illegible] reapportionment be [illegible] of the [illegible] before the next [illegible] shall remedy this condition [illegible] which will give to all [illegible] the state equal representation [illegible] the state and the house, [illegible] to the population as shown by the United States census in 1910.

"Be it further Resolved, That [illegible] and we demand that all [illegible] for the senate and [illegible] of representatives [illegible] the counties included in [illegible] required to [illegible] to work and [illegible] regardless [illegible] or political [illegible] and that those who fail [illegible] pledge be refused [illegible] at the polls without regard to party.

Be it further Resolved, That all political parties be most urgently requested to insert in their platforms a plank [illegible] the passage of a just reapportionment bill.

BETTERING OF OUR PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

"Whereas, There is no question that more vitally affects the people of our state at the present time than that of bettering our public highways, we [illegible] that the next [illegible] submit a constitutional [illegible] providing for a [illegible] mill state [illegible] that [illegible] road tax of one [illegible] mill, as authorized by the [illegible] be levied by the next [illegible] the same to be expended under the supervision of the state highway commission, and that the [illegible] make a liberal appropriation annually hereafter to enable the state highway commission to employ [illegible] of competent men to [illegible] the local road authorities in [illegible]

"Whereas, During the last few years [illegible] of enormous magnitude have been prosecuted, whereby [illegible] have been reclaimed [illegible] into rich and fertile [illegible] therefore;

Be it [illegible] by this association, That Minnesota, through the board of [illegible] should immediately dispose of enough of the bonds of other [illegible] held by it as are necessary to [illegible] to our own people [illegible] to state development, especially for roads, drainage and [illegible]

"Be it therefore Resolved, That we are heartily in accord with the drainage movement commenced by the various counties.

Be it therefore Resolved, That the federal government be urged to reclaim the million of acres held by it in trust for the Chippewa Indians.

"Whereas, There is owned by the state of Minnesota a vast area of land amounting to over 2,000,000 acres, and

Whereas, This great acreage is contained almost entirely in eight counties of Northern Minnesota, where new settlements are struggling with the problem of building roads and schools and are finding themselves handicapped by state lands that present a constant barrier to road construction and bear no part of the expense of road and school building so necessary to the healthy growth of any new country;

Therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the demand of Northern Minnesota, in convention assembled, that speedy and adequate relief be afforded by the next legislature looking to the correction of the evils that may exist in the handling of state lands. That direct appropriations be made to all counties in which state lands exist, proportionate to the acreage of state lands in such counties, to aid in the building of roads and schools therein and the development of the agricultural advantages thereof.

[illegible] state lands, suitable for agriculture, [illegible] sold or offered for sale in their virgin state, with the timber, by contract or fee simple, to the end that the settler building a home on these lands may have some means of support from the timber while developing their farms. That the legislature at its next session, provide for the classification and appraisement of all state lands and that all lands, classified as agricultural, be offered for sale at a reasonable price at frequent intervals. That an amendment to the constitution of the state be submitted to the people amending article 8 thereof so as to permit the enactment of a better and more business-like method of disposing of state lands, having in view the proper protection of the permanent school fund for the state.

"Whereas, We believe that the powers of the board of immigration should be greatly enlarged, so that the advantages of the state for homeseekers may be given the greatest publicity, therefore,

"Be it Resolved, That the legislature be requested to appropriate not less than $100,000 annually for the use of the board of immigration.

"Whereas, The federal government will, on June 20, 1910, open for settlement over 275,000 acres of land in the Cass Lake, Crookston and Duluth districts in the northern part of Minnesota,

"Be it Resolved, That this association appreciates the act of the department in opening said lands for settlement and that we co-operate with the different federal land offices and the state immigration bureau in giving general publicity to this opening and endeavor to attract actual settlers to the land.

"Be it Resolved, That we recommend to the next legislature the passage of such legislation as may be needed for the establishment of a system of rural township graded schools, wherein as much instruction in the elements of agriculture, home economics and manual training may be taught as it is possible to give, and the granting of liberal appropriations to encourage the development of such a system, and for the accomplishment of this work we recommend the creation of a rural state school board whose duties it shall be to foster and direct the establishment of such a system.

"Be it Resolved, That we recommend that the system of secondary agricultural schools, consisting of the school of agriculture at Crookston, Morris and St. Anthony Park, be extended from time to time as conditions demand.

"Be it Resolved, That the movement for the establishment of agricultural departments in urban high schools be restricted to those high schools so situated that schools surrounding a village or city can secure better results through cooperation with the village or city high school than through independent organization.

"Be it Resolved, That we recommend the establishment of a thoroughly efficient training department for the preparation of teachers for the rural schools and that the elements of agriculture be added to the list of subjects required for the certification of all teachers of the rural schools.

"Be it Resolved, That we approve of the policy of bringing the results of the experiments and research conducted in the university to the people and recommend that liberal appropriation for such extension work be made.

"Be it further Resolved, That the delegates of the convention, each and every one of them, hereby express their appreciation of the courteous, hospitable treatment accorded them by the [illegible] and the Commercial club of Crookston and the officers of the association."

BIG DAY AT TERREBONNE

Ladies of the Church Raised More Than Two Hundred Dollars.

Terrebonne, Minn., June 20—Last Sunday was indeed a great day for Terrebonne, which is not too far out in the country to gather a big crowd. The dinner served by the ladies of the parish to our many friends of Red Lake Falls, Brooks, Gentilly and Crookston, proved to be an immense success.

The dinners and balmy air of Terrebonne are proverbial. "Let us go to Terrebonne and have a dandy time," is the common saying.

The tables set in the church—which is soon to be adorned with very pretty pews—were artistically decorated with flowers that harmonized well with the elegant and amiable young waiters.

The admirers of base ball had the pleasure of a nice game between Red Lake Falls and Terrebonne teams. The score stood 7 to 11 in favor of Terrebonne. The others, remaining and chatting under the very attractive trees of the rectory, enjoyed a good glass of soft drink with a cone of delicious ice cream, both very palatable in this extreme wave of heat.

The president of this [illegible], Mrs. X. Sauve, together with all devoted ladies in charge as assistants, wish to extend, through the Gazette their hearty thanks to all the parishioners and friends of the neighboring towns who have encouraged them by their presence. They are proud of the net receipts which exceeded the sum of $200.00.

The directors of the Merchants State Bank fully realize that its financial ability depends largely upon the men, women and children that have the money to deposit; and if the citizens of Red Lake Falls and surrounding country want a strong, vigorous banking institution with the ability and disposition to fournish money to "BOOST" all honest business and worthy public enterprises, they should deposit ALL THEIR FUNDS with the bank even tho they use them the next day. MAKING FIGURES LIE; CAMPAIGN OF MISREPRESENTATION

Thief River People Trying to Hoodwink the Voters of Red Lake County.

Campaign of Misrepresentation is Started by the Up River People.

If all the people of Red Lake County were crowded into half its territory, it is self evident that lands would then sell at advanced prices, that there would be more personal property to the square mile, or to the township, and that the RATE of taxation would be reduced correspondingly.

It does not take much of a mathematician to figure that of two counties the same size, one with an assessed valuation of a million dollars, the other three million with an equal amount of revenue needed, the people living in the county with the smaller valuation will pay three times the RATE of the people in the other county.

It is a fact accepted as true that small counties are run more economically than large counties if and the it is all [illegible] those counties have population and wealth. The reduction of the size does not lower the rate of taxation unless the wealth and inhabitants are retained within the smaller territory.

Using the small county argument, the Thief River papers have started the campaign for county division, using figures in an argument so misleading as to be equivalent to gross misrepresentation to deceive the people and to induce them to vote for county division.

They use for comparison southern Minnesota counties smaller than would be the county of Pennington and show that the rate of taxation in those counties is lower than in Red Lake. They mention Scott county, Carver county and Dodge county, not one of which has more than twelve townships about a third the size of Red Lake county. These counties have rates of taxation lower than Red Lake and therefore they say, if Red Lake county is cut in two we'll have small counties and taxes will be reduced.

Tell it to a policeman and he'll lock you up in a padded cell.

Isn't that comparison of rates the boldest bit of bluff a gang ever tried to put over on a bunch of voters?

Assuming that all the figures are correct it is the boldest attempt at deception.

Any one of those three small counties has a population larger than Red Lake's and greater wealth, all contained within twelve small townships.

Scott county, for example, has three or four finely improved farms on every section of land in the county, a hundred or more to the township, and it is doubtful if Red Lake would average twenty five well improved farms to the township the county over.

That's the kind of comparison the Thief River papers did not make.

They say cut the county in two and we'll have smaller counties and smaller taxes.

A $5000 or $6000 farm in Red Lake county would be an $8000 or $10000 farm in Scott county. The question of rate has no bearing on the case except as the rate has relation to the valuation placed on property. The Scott county farmer will actually pay more into the county treasury on his $8000 or $10000 farm at 23 mills than the Red Lake county man will on his $5000 or $6000 farm at 45 mills. If the statements of rate published in the Thief River papers are correct, we ought to congratulate ourselves. Scott county with only twelve townships and yet more wealth and people within that small territory than in all Red Lake county, has a rate of taxation more than half as large as Red Lake's with its fewer people scattered over thirty-two townships and low property valuations.

Comparisons of rates with counties where conditions are different, proves nothing to our disadvantage.

Why don't the people of Thief River Falls tell a few truths?

Why don't they tell HOW MUCH MONEY it costs to run Red Lake county compared with little Scott or Carver? Those are figures that would mean something.

Why don't they tell how much it costs to run a township?

A comparison of tax rates gives no authentic information until there is a comparison of population and of property valuation to the square mile or the township.

But the Thief River people are going to have a small county like Scott and low rate of taxes like Scott's, even if they will then have less than one half as many people as Scott and probably not more than a third of the property valuation.

It is a ridiculous proposition. The people of Red Lake county should read those figures so generously supplied by the Thief River papers and then do a little figuring for themselves.

Lindquist-Erickson.

The marriage of two prominent Polk Centre young people occurred in this city yesterday morning. The contracting parties were Miss Emily Augusta Lindquist, sister of County Commissioner C. A. Lindquist, and Mr. Martin Erickson. The ceremony was performed in the parlor of the Grand View Hotel at 11 o'clock by Judge V. M. Higinbotham. The young people were attended by Miss Tessie Jacobson and Mr. Gunnard Lindquist.

Mr. and Mrs. Erickson have gone to housekeeping on the groom's farm in Polk Centre. A large number of friends join in extending congratulations and best wishes.

At the Republican convention held in Thief River Falls last Friday, hoggishness, instead of justice and fairness, seemed to predominate. Red Lake Falls or any other place opposed to Thief River Falls were not allowed any delegates to the state convention, as that city had the power and they used it to the extent that would make any uninterested observer conclude that he would hesitate to place all the power of Red Lake or we might say Pennington county in their hands. It may sometimes be good politics to be fair when you are on the top, instead of carrying good luck too far and carrying disaster, meeting disaster on the road.—Sunbeam.

SHORT CHANGE ARTIST

Arthur N. Daly Will be Compelled to Answer to a Serious Charge

A man giving the name of Arthur N. Daley and claiming to come from Penn, North Dakota, is a guest of Sheriff Nelson at the county jail.

Daly made a deal with Fred Zaiser for the purchase of a team of horses for $250. He gave Mr. Zaiser a check for $125 and got a check for $75 in change. He cashed the $75 check at St. Hilaire and a little later it was learned that the bank on which the $125 check was drawn refused to honor it.

Daly was arrested on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. He was taken before Justice Higinbotham yesterday and was bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

TOURNAMENT AT BEMIDJI NEXT WEEK

Red Lake Falls Athletes Will Not Participate This Year.

Frank Jeffers, H. H. Hennemuth and Jos. Salley will go to Bemidji next week to represent the local fire department as delegates to the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament association. E. G. Base will also be in attendance, he being a member of the executive committee. The tournament will continue for three days—Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 4, 5 and 6. The Red Lake Falls department will not send an athletic team to participate in this year's events.

THE BAND WILL PLAY

Will Give an Open Air Concert In Front of the City Hall Friday Evening.

Manager Healy requests the Gazette to announce that the band will give an open air concert in front of the city hall Friday evening and that Director Brunelle has prepared a program of good numbers for the occasion. No doubt many people will be on the street to enjoy the good music.

L. A. Kaufer ran a harness shop here until 1882, and then removed to Red Lake Falls, where he has since resided. He called here Monday for the first time in 28 years, and notices some changes. The town is twice as big and handsome, he says, but real estate has gone down in price since 1882. He owns a lot on West Lincoln avenue which he could have sold at that time for $2,000, and he did sell a lot on Court street near the present Presbyterian church in 1882 for some $3,000 which has since been sold for about $1,500. In short, Fergus Falls real estate is not inflated.—Wheelock's (Fergus Falls) Weekly.

COMPLETE REPORT OF HIGH SCHOOL

Manual Training, Agriculture and Home Science Added to the Course.

Our School Board to be Commended for the Interest Shown in Work.

The reports of the city superintendent in Red Lake Falls to County Superintendent Anderson and State High School Inspector George B. Aiton contain a few items which the Gazette considers to be of importance to the citizens of this community. According to these reports a total of 78 students have been enrolled in our high school during the year 1909-10, the largest enrollment our state high school has enjoyed for a number of years. The enrollment in the grades during the same period has been 342. This makes the entire enrollment in both grades and high school a total of 420 pupils. 373 of these pupils are entitled to state aid under the apportionment, an apportionment which is of great assistance to our public schools. This compares very favorably with reports of the school year 1908-9, and, considering the improvement which the teaching ability has undergone and the various lines along which the equipment has been increased ought to be very gratifying to the citizens of Red Lake Falls.

At this time the Gazette wishes to briefly sketch the outline of the new work which is to be installed at the opening of school in September—no doubt the most significant improvement which the public schools have undergone since the establishment of the State High School here about ten years ago. The Board of Education has already engaged two special teachers to handle the new work in Manual Training, Agriculture, and Home Science,—Mr. Jasper I. Swedeberg of the College of Agriculture for the two subjects first named, and Miss Emma S. Weld of Chicago University for the work in Cooking and Sewing. At present the Board and Supt. Koos are making plans and purchases of the proper apparatus for conducting this new work and developing the courses of study.

Tools and benches to accomodate as many as fifteen boys at one time and a hundred boys during the week in the classes in woodwork. This work is to be required of every boy in the schools from the sixth grade up through the high school and will be added to the regular course of study as another subject. The details of the work can not be stated at this time, but plans for the work call for the making of nothing but articles with utility, things that can be used in the homes from which the boys come. The work will be so graded that all boys will grow in the knowlege of the most common carpenter tools.

The work in Agriculture, which will be a course open to freshmen in the High School, is also to be a departure into the realm of the "intensely practical" in education. This course though it will be based upon a text book, will deal with the practical things in farming. Enough apparatus will be purchased and enough actually useful work will be done during the one year through which this course will extend that those taking it will find it exceedingly valuable whether they live in town or country. Some of the phases of farm work in soils and the fertilizers with actual fertilizer tests, study of the various farm crops as to variety, selection, culture, and improvement, with a consideration of the enemies of these crops; observation in types and breeds of the farm animals with judging practice, feeding, etc; consideration of the many questions that come up under farm management; not to forget a strong emphasis upon dairying, a subject which in this corner of the state is rapidly growing in importance. The school will own a milk-tester and hopes to maintain a close connection with the creameries in our vicinity.

The work in both Manual Training and Agriculture will be taught by a young man who has worked on a farm, has spent some time working at the carpenter's trade, while his work and record at the College of Agriculture assures us that he is fully prepared to handle the theoretical side of both subjects which he is to teach.

Just as complete an equipment is to be purchased for the work in Domestic science. The purpose at present is to require sewing in its several branches of the fifth, sixth, seventh grade girls and during the second and third years of the high school course, while cooking is to be required of eighth grade and of high school freshman and senior girls. The work in these courses is to be nearly all actual laboratory and will consist of little reading and study. One of the large rooms in the Lafayette building is to be fitted up with enough kitchen tables, utensils, stoves, etc., to accomodate as many as sixteen girls at one time, and sewing tables, mashines, etc., for about the same number so that all girls from the fifth grade up through the high school can be taken care of during the school week. The work in cooking will include the practice in the proper care and use of stoves, tables, and kitchen utensils, a study of the composition of the principal articles of diet, and the preparation among numberless other things of such food articles as egg, meat, fish, poultry, cereals, sugar, milk, cheese, frozen dishes, and salads. Under sewing will come a great variety of practical exercises. All the principal stitches and seams will receive recognition and emphasis in relation to the making of articles useful about the house. Exercises in the repair of fabrics will be required. There will be work in drafting and in complete garment making, and numerous other phases of domestic art which we do not have space to mention in these columns.

The board is receiving enthusiastic support in this movement toward industrial education. They know that this installation is no pioneer work, as almost two-thirds of the state high schools are offering it already and they wish to give in and around Red Lake Falls the privileges of the best education obtainable. They feel that the support of the intellegent people in the community is with them.

OLD GUIDE'S TRAMPS

Interesting Recollections Told By Pierre Bottineau Twenty-five Years Ago.

In its department headed "Twenty-five Years Ago" a reprint of interesting items printed in the paper a quarter of a century ago before the Minneapolis Journal prints the following:

"Things have changed since I was young" said Pierre Bottineau, the old pioneer resident of Minnesota, Saturday morning. The old gentleman was the first settler in St. Anthony. Years ago he moved north and now lives at Red Lake Falls. He is visiting a few old friends in the city and will sit for hours and talk over the early scenes in the states' history.

"Forty-eight years ago I came up with my family from St. Paul and settled on the east side just opposite the upper end of Nicholett island, where built a log house," said the old man. "At that time there were just six families in St. Paul. For six years I lived there in quiet before another settler came. An old man lived below me to take charge of a claim belonging to Franklin Steele. I made a good living trading with the Indians, mostly of the Soo tribe. I owned 400 acres of land on the east side of the river, but about thirty two years ago I commenced selling off and trading small tracts for horses or anything I could get. Little did I think then of the great transformation that was to follow, that soon the wilderness would be made over into a great city.

"About twenty-eight years ago I led the Stevens expidition through Fort Benton on the Missouri. You see I was born up at Fort Benton and when a younger man I traveled up from Benton into the Saskatchewan country and down to St. Anthony until I knew every foot of land, every grove, every lake and you might say I knew the country by heart.

"The Stevens expidition was the first one made through this part of the country. Then a few years later Sibley come on with 400 wagons drawn by six-mule teams and I guided them through. There was lots of game in those days. I remember when with Sibley that we struck a grove on the prairie up near Breckenridge and it was covered with Buffalo eating. Speaking of expiditions, I also guided the party that surveyed the route for the Northern Pacific."

TOOK TWO BALL GAMES

Locals Won Handily From the Fast Brandow Team of Crookston.

The ball game Sunday afternoon between the locals and the Brandows of Crookston was a good exhibition and delighted the fans for at no stage did the Crookstonites look dangerous. Until the eighth inning the Brandows were blanked. In that inning two or three bad errors and a couple of timely hits netted them three scores. But in the first seven the locals had accumulated six and there was nothing more doing. Garceau pitched a good game, having twelve strike outs and allowing only four hits. He was given good support except in the eighth.

The score by innings:

R. L. Falls	3	0	1	0	0	2	0	0	x	—6

NEW TRIAL GRANTED

Damage Suit Against the Red Lake Falls Milling Company.

The personal injury suit, W. A. Sarseleil vs. Red Lake Falls Milling company, will probably be tried in district court again. When the case was tried before the jury gave a verdict for the defendant. An appeal was taken and the supreme court has recently rendered a decision reversing the order and granting a new trial.

Sarseleil was employed by the milling company in its grain elevator at St. Hilaire and was injured by his hand being caught between a belt and pully while he was attempting, with his hands, to place the belt upon the pully. He brought action for damages on the ground that his injury was due to the failure of the company to supply a belt shifter.

The supreme court held that the statute requiring owners of factories mills or work shops to furnish, if practicable, belt shifters, applies to owners of grain elevators. It was also held that trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to the effect that it was the duty of the defendant company, if it was practicable, to furnish belt shifters.

TRIBUTE TO PREXY

"HAIL MINNESOTA" WAS MOST IMPRESSIVELY SUNG AT COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY

Nearly 600 Black-Garbed Seniors Receive Diplomas From Dr. Northrop's Hand—Ex-Pres. Folwell There.

Minneapolis. — Two abreast, escorted by the University band, 592 graduates of the University of Minnesota wended their way from the chapel to the armory to receive their diplomas. As the leaders reached the armory entrance the line halted, the two ranks separated, and formed a lane of black-gowned, square-capped graduates, through which President Cyrus Northrop, followed by the members of the faculty, walked into the building.

His head bared, and attired in the black gown, with the hood lined with purple silk to denote his honorary degree of doctor of law, President Northrop stepped firmly through the long line of students who stood hats in hands and heads bowed. He seemed to have shed for the day the weight of years and labor that has commenced to bow his shoulders. Members of the faculty did not wear gowns, appearing in the conventional garb of everyday life.

Hardly had the graduates found their seats when the band started to play "Hail, Minnesota." The entire audience sang the first two verses and then the graduates, on their feet, every eye turned towards the form of President Northrop, standing by the dais on the platform, sang in slower time the second verse:

Hail to thee, our Prexy, Sire,
Thou hast made us all thine own,
And our hearts ane hoon aspire,
That our love may be thy throne.
Throughout our future years
Naught can e'er thy memory mar,
We will guard thy fame
And adore thy name,
Thou shalt be our Northern star.

When the singers had settled in their seats again, the band played "The Gay Musician," till the crowd had quieted, and then President Northrop led in prayer.

After a brief service of music, the degrees were conferred, each graduate receiving his diploma from the hand of President Northrop. As each diploma was given, the friends of the recipient in the audience applauded, and frequently waved their handkerchiefs. Though many of the women in the audience showed their emotion, not a single untoward event marked the ceremonies.

The candidates for the master's degree, four in science and twenty-seven in literature and arts, were the last to receive the coveted sheepskins. The masters were privileged to discard the cap and wear in its stead a hood. The masters from the science department had hoods trimmed in gold, maroon, and yellow; those from the department of literature and arts in gold, maroon and white.

After the presentation of the master's degrees, the honor students were announced, each being loudly applauded as his name was mentioned. The band then led the audience in the national hymn "America," after which benediction was pronounced and the ceremonies were over.

HOTEL AT WHITE BEAR BURNS.

Third Building On the Same Site Is Destroyed By Fire.

White Bear.—Incendiaries are supposed to have set fire to the new Oriental hotel at White Bear lake, which was totally destroyed, entailing a loss estimated at about $50,000. Henry Dieg, 971 Dayton avenue, St. Paul, proprietor, said that he carried only $14,500 insurance on the place.

When the fire was first discovered by a passerby, the flames were already belching from the windows in different parts of the building, which makes the fire marshal believe it was started in several places at once.

Jerry Flynn, the caretaker, was aroused by the crackling of flames barely in time to make his escape, half dressed. An impromptu fire brigade was organized, which fought the blaze until help arrived from St. Paul.

Cottages Take Fire.

The cottages of Michael McNamera and Dr. A. J. Aldrich caught fire from the shower of sparks and were burned to the ground. Several other cottages were threatened, but the timely arrival of the St. Paul firemen saved them from destruction.

In former years the site of the Oriental was occupied by the Chateguory and later by the Wahbehaguay hotels, both of which were destroyed by fire said to have been caused by firebugs.

PINCHOT AND GARFIELD SPEAK.

Banquet at Ryan Hotel at Which Both Talk Conservation.

St. Paul.—Conservation was the topic of the day in St. Paul Saturday. Two of the country's foremost exponents of that great cause were guests of the St. Paul Roosevelt club at a banquet at the Ryan hotel Saturday evening. Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester, and James R. Garfield, former secretary of the interior, were the orators.

Elaborate preparations had been made for the banquet in the evening. Justice Jaggard of the state supreme court was toastmaster. Hugh T. Halbert, president of the Roosevelt club, spoke first. He was followed by Gov. A. O. Eberhart, who welcomed the visitors and who delivered an address on "The State and Conservation." "The City and Conservation" was the subject upon which Mayor Geier of St. Paul spoke.

Mr. Garfield's subject was "The Ultimate Results of Conservation."

The speech which will serve as a climax to the evening was one given by Mr. Pinchot on "Our National Resources and How They Are Best Conserved." In a letter received in St. Paul from Mr. Pinchot during the week the former chief forester stated that he would make his speech a "fighting" one. He added that he would not mention any names, but it was taken for granted that he will speak in a most plain manner.

Bismarck, June 16.—With the acclaim of a multitude of Catholic laymen and in the presence of church dignitaries from all parts of the northwest Bishop Vincent Wehrle, was today formally installed bishop of the diocese of Bismarck.

Bishop Wehrle was installed with the formal church ceremony, Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul, conducting the ceremony.

Following the formal ceremony the visiting priests of the diocese kissed the ring of the new bishop, thus pledging their support and obedience to the new authority of the church in the diocese of Bismarck.

Archbishop Ireland was the guest of Governor John Burke during his stay in Bismarck and last night at a banquet in honor of Bishop Wehrle made a ringing and patriotic address, dwelling upon the importance of church growth and influence and of the establishment of the new diocese of the church in the western part of the state. GETS WARM WELCOME.

President Taft Receives Big Ovation at Marietta.

Marietta, O., June 15.—As warm a welcome as was ever received by a national executive, was extended to President Taft when he arrived in Marietta at noon today to attend the diamond jubilee celebration of the 75th anniversary of Marietta college.

The arrival of his special train was the signal for an official salute of twenty-one guns, while an official reception committee of 2,000 school children carried flags, and flowers and extended greetings of the city. President Taft and his party were immediately taken to the home of W. W. Mills. After luncheon at the Mills home, the president was taken to the college library where he delivered the original deed which gave the northwest territory of the Ohio Land Co., just after the revolutionary war, and other historical documents.

At 2 o'clock he delivered an address in Muskingum park. Following this he spoke at the college exercises in the famous old First Congregational church. The president was then taken to American Union Lodge No. 1, one of the oldest Masonic organizations in the country, and spoke a few words.

An automobile ride will complete his visit, and many historical points of interest were visited. He will return to Washington at 5 o'clock.

Survivors Tell Sad Tales.

Cologne, June 15.—Stories of death and suffering of survivors are brought by refugees from the flooded valley of the Ahr. The waters are rapidly subsiding, but while at their height they wrought frightful damage. Several villages on banks of the river Ahr are washed away. Houses collapsing hurled their occupants beneath the flood.

So strong was the current that it swept away locomotives and steam road rollers as a child might scatter its toys. Near the mouth of the Ahr river a rescuing party recovered the bodies of a woman and an infant.

Fee Clause Not Constitutional.

Grand Forks, N. D., June 15.—Judge Templeton in a decision handed down today holds that the fee clause of the primaries as amended by the North Dakota primary law originally provided that the county official filing for office should give a fee amounting to 2 per cent of the salary he would receive in the office. This was held to be unconstitutional. At the last session of the legislature the clause was amended to read 1 per cent of the salary and it is this amendment which 's knocked out today by Templeton.

Floods in Bavaria.

Bavaria, June 15.—Oberammergau, the scene of the Passion play, is today cut off from railway communication with outside points by the flood that has invaded the district.

Of 600 strangers in the place to witness the sacred performance, 300 are Americans. It is believed, however, that there is no danger, as the hotels are on high grounds. The lower streets are filled with water.

Senate Bill Has Rider.

They do not feel certain, however, that the statehood legislation will emerge from the conference.

FLOODS KILL 200

HEAVY RAINS AND CLOUDBURST SWELL GERMAN RIVERS—FLOODS FATAL.

LOADED BRIDGES FALL

Thirty-Seven Dead Bodies Have Been Picked UP From Along the Banks of the River Ahr Where They Were Thron.

Cologne, Germany, June 14.—It is estimated that 200 persons lost their lives in a flood that swept the valley of the River Ahr in the Tifel region. Eighty-seven bodies have been recovered today. These were found along the river banks, tossed high by the flood or left stranded as the waters subsided.

A report received here today says that fifty lives were lost at the village of Schult when a bridge which was crowded with persons watching the turbulent waters was carried away. Throughout the Ahr valley only one bridge is left standing.

Heavy rains, of several days' duration, caused the river to rise and break its boundaries. Sunday night there was a cloudburst and the waters choked the valley, drowning every living creature in their path and causing immense monetary damage.

Two barracks in which Italian and Croatian laborers were housed were swept away and their occupants drowned. A railway was washed out and small villages destroyed. Lightning which accompanied the rains did much damage.

Yesterday the flood subsided. There is much distress among the inhabitants of the valley who have survived, as most of them have lost their possessions.

Hamilton Not Satisfied.

New York, June 14.—Charles K. Hamilton, the young aviator whose remarkable cross country flight yesterday to Philadelphia and return supplied the world of aviation with a new sensation and new records, is today looking for more aerial spaces to conquer. This morning found the daring aeroplanist, refreshed by a good night's rest after his nerve racking trip, and already planning further conquests of the air.

Hamilton is known to have one great present ambition. It is to beat the record Paulhan established for a continuous cross-country flight. That 117 miles without a stop, made by the French aviator in his journey from London to Manchester, still stares the ambitious American in the face.

It is known that Hamilton intends at the first opportunity, to undertake a flight that will give him the chance which ill-fortune spoiled yesterday.

Wild Crowds in Montreal.

Montreal, June 14.—An all night search of the ruins of The Herald building, which was destroyed by fire yesterday, brought to light but one additional victim, making in all only three recovered. Relays of police and firemen are digging at the ruins and it will be at least thirty-six hours more before the basement, which is believed to contain the bodies of twenty-six additional victims, is reached.

A wild crowd began to besiege the city morgues early today, searching for missing friends and relations. Reports from hospitals indicate that the twenty-five injured are doing well. An official investigation into the cause of the disaster has been ordered.

Bad Canadian Fires.

Winnipeg, Man., June 14.—All the fire rangers in and around the district of Fort Williams, Ont., were ordered out to fight a terrible conflagration raging in the timber for a radius of fifty miles north and west of that city. Scores of settlers' homes are threatened. Ten thousand dollars' worth of timber is destroyed. The village of Hymers is surrounded and forty settlers' homes in Conmee township will be destroyed. Fires are raging in Conmee, Gillies and O'Connor townships. A big electrical plant at Kakabeka Falls, which supplies Fort Williams and Port Arthur with power, was compelled to shut down.

May Not See Son Graduate.

Washington, June 14.—Because of the possibility that next week may witness the end of the present congressional session, President Taft has decided not to start for New Haven Sunday night. If there should be delay in congress the president will go to New Haven Tuesday night to remain over Wednesday. But if there is a pressure of business he will forego the privilege of seeing his son graduate.

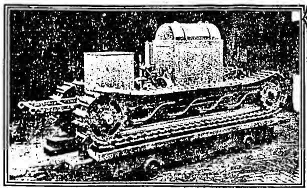
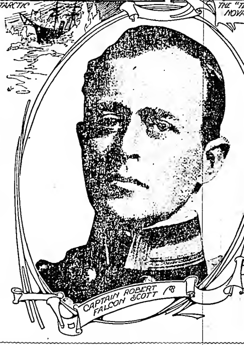
SCOTT'S SOUTH POLE EXPEDITION NEARLY READY



MOTOR-SLEIGH TO BE USED BY THE ANTARCTIC

THE "TERRA NOVA"



CAPTAIN ROBERT FALCON SCOTT

LONDON.—At the West India docks preparations are being rapidly completed for the expedition which Capt. Robert Falcon Scott is to lead in search of the south pole, and it now seems likely that a start will surely be made in June. Painters, carpenters, smiths and other [illegible] fitters are swarming over the Terra Nova, the ship in which the antarctic explorers will sail, and the [illegible] vessel is nearly ready. Captain Scott, who is an officer in the royal navy, has been overseeing all this work and selecting the extensive outfit that he will take with him. He has given especial attention to the matter of motor sledges and finally has picked out one which it is hoped will be of the greatest assistance in getting over the great ice cap which covers the southern extremity of the earth. It is so constructed that the driving wheels do not touch the ground, but rest on an endless chain, and this, as it were, travel along a road carried by the car. Sir Ernest Shackleton also took a motor sledge with him on his "furthest south" expedition, but it was not a complete success, though of considerable use at times. Captain Scott will make his final start for the south pole from New Zealand.

ONCE A ROMAN TOWN

Ruins of Ancient Settlement Found Near Voorburg, Holland.

Dutch Government Assists Society in Work of Uncovering Old Walls and Moats—Fortress Is Mentioned in Chronicles.

The Hague.—An eminent German historian has called the present century "the age of the spade," for the seekers of the past no longer confine their studies to musty archives, but pickax and shovel are called into requisition to reconstitute the history of bygone times. So far not much has been accomplished in that direction in Holland and it is generally by some lucky chance that any antiquities are unearthed. It is now some 80 years ago that a learned archeologist recognized as Roman antiquities some objects that had accidentally been dug up in a country seat not far from The Hague, in the small village of Voorburg. Now, popular tradition had always seen in Voorburg, a famous forum of Roman times, which, according to old chronicles, was situated somewhere on the great canal dug by the Romans in the time of the Emperor Claudius for military purposes. This canal, the "Fossa Corbulanus," extended for many miles from where afterward was Delft to beyond Leyden, which was also a Roman settlement, thus joining the rivers Schie and Rhine, forming a continuous waterway for the Roman fleet. Eighty years ago there were only a few people, however, to take an interest in the unearthing of a few amphorae, tiles and vases.

But the owner of the country seat was full of zeal and did what he could with his private means, so that, in the course of a few years, it was impossible to doubt any longer that there, deep in the soil, was an important fortress or a city of Roman origin. Ever since that time excavations have been going on in a desultory manner, but a year or two ago a company was formed, which took the name of the Arentsburg society, after the county seat, which is most significantly Arentsburg, or "the Castle of the Eagles." It will be remembered that the Roman emblem, like the American, was the eagle.

The new company has been working more systematically and the walls and moats of an extensive fortification have been partly laid bare. These, archeologists declare, were built in the second half of the first century A. D. The Dutch government has now also become interested in this important historical document of stone and has voted a subsidy of 10,000 florins in installments, to be paid yearly during five years to the society, beginning with 2,000 florins in 1910. The provincial states have also appropriated 500 florins a year for the same purpose, while the local authorities and many private individuals contribute considerable sums.

As far as can be judged now it is probable that Arentsburg, once near the well fortified harbor for the Roman fleet, and a considerable Roman settlement, was built on an emplacement elevated with the soil that had been dug out of the "Fossa Corbulans," which was dug by Corbula during the reign of Emperor Claudius, after he had conquered the Frisians.

Old chronicles mention a fortress in these parts. They tell of the ruins of a great castle, which was destroyed by the Normans. Tradition wove many fables about these ruins, which, in the fifteenth or sixteenth century, still covered some eight acres of ground. After that time no further mention is made by them and in the eighteenth century the county seat, Arentsburg, was laid out on the same spot, so that it would seem that all the masonry above ground must by that time have disappeared. When next year the company doing the excavating work can begin in earnest, many an important "find" may be anticipated.

Girls never could throw straight, so if a girl throws herself at a fellow and misses him she generally hits another.

Piano Player is Curiosity

Rare Specimen of Such Instrument Made About 1780—Mechanical Playing Device in Bottom.

Philadelphia.—A musical instrument which is, in all probability, the only one of its kind in this country, was presented to the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art and added to the collection of old pianos in Memorial hall, Fairmount park. It is one of the earliest specimens of a combination piano and player-piano and was made about 1780. It is the gift of D. E. Woolley, treasurer of the Estey company, who secured it after a thorough search of the country for some of the earlier specimens of this form of piano construction.

The instrument is a six-octave piano and resembles somewhat in appearance the old-fashioned style of bookcase. It stands about seven feet high and the case is of mahogany. Above the music rack is a soft, stationary drapery, which was intended to be both ornamental and provide a screen for the interior mechanism of the instrument. Age has placed its indelible mark on this ornamentation and it is now torn in many places, being exceedingly fragile, although it still preserves to some extent its original delicacy and design.

The most interesting feature about it, however, is its two-fold use, showing, as it does, that the idea of a self-playing instrument is far from a recent conception. As a piano it conforms to much of the general appearance of the usual antique upright. Its mechanical playing device is contained in the base of the instrument, but instead of paper rolls, such as are now used the notes were produced by large wooden cylinders, into which were placed metal pins, much on the principle of the well-known music box. Each of these cylinders contained three selections.

Three of the cylinders accompanied the gift of the piano. Although the selections that are played on it are now barely distinguishable, they are quaint in musical form, suggestive of the compositions of Handel. The mechanism that moved the rolls is still in good condition. This is a spring motor on the order of a watch or music box and is wound up by a crank. As the cylinder is turned the little metal pins strike projecting jacks, which in turn raise the hammer from the strings of the instrument. As each one is released it strikes a string and the note is produced. Provision has been made for changing the time and also for producing various effects in expression, according to the will of the person manipulating it.

Evidently Pleased.

"I suppose papa acted just awful when you asked him for my hand, didn't he?" queried the fair maid, who happened to be the eldest of six daughters.

"Well," answered the young man in the case, "he tried his best to control himself, but he displayed all the symptoms of a man who had just received a letter from home containing money."

Woodpecker Alarm Clock

New Jersey Preacher Crawls From His Bed at Call of Industrious Little Bird.

New York.—A novel alarm clock is the [illegible] possession of Rev. Dr. George A. Paul, pastor of the Upper Montclair (N. J.) Presbyterian church. He has to crawl unwillingly from bed at the call of a woodpecker. The clergyman was awakened one morning recently by a hammering on the roof of his house. He found the noise was caused by a woodpecker knocking on the sheet-iron covering on top of the chimney. Dr. Paul frightened the bird away and went back to bed, but the noise was renewed. The clergyman gather papers and built a fire, the smoke of which effectually checked the bird for the time. Next morning, however, Mr. Woodpecker was there again trying to drill a hole through the sheet-iron cover. The clergyman again burned paper. After several mornings of this work Dr. Paul took to putting papers in the fireplace before he went to bed at night so as to be ready on the instant for his visitor in the morning. The bird now calls regularly at 6:30 a. m. and compels the pastor to rise in order to start the smoke that will shut off the tapping alarm.

FARM HANDS GETTING SCARCE

Illinois Labor Bureau Reports Inability to Supply Frequent Calls for Laborers.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary David Ross of the State Bureau of Labor Statistics is receiving reports from officials in charge of the six free employment offices of the state of many openings for farm hands which the offices are unable to fill. Peoria has reported 156 reports for help of various sorts on the farm in anticipation of the beginning of spring work.

In connection with the shortage of farm hands it is reported that the tendency of applicants for places through the employment bureaus to refuse to register is growing. Many applicants enter the offices, ask for openings, and on finding none at the time, they depart without leaving their names. Sometimes they call again, sometimes not.

A list of unregistered requests for work is being compiled in the office of the bureau of labor for reference. In connection with the list it will be shown how many of those who applied were at the time without employment.

War on "Rats."

Elgin, Ill.—Twelve senior girls at the Elgin high school appeared in their classroom with their hair combed tightly back over their ears and neatly braided. As a secret organization just formed they have signed a pledge to abandon "rats." They call their society the "Anti-Rat league," and expect that their attitude toward false hair will have an effect upon other girls in the school.

ROOSEVELT'S HUNT FOR AFRICAN GAME

Lions and Other Animals Shot in Large Numbers.

YEAR ON DARK CONTINENT

Naturalists Collected Hundreds of Specimens for the Smithsonian Institution—Kermit Photographer of the Party.

Theodore Roosevelt's hunting trip in Africa, officially known as the Smithsonian African expedition, lasted nearly eleven months and was most successful in every way. The colonel's desire to hunt big game was not all that was back of the trip, for the Smithsonian Institution wanted specimens of the fauna and flora of the Dark Continent and commissioned the ex-president to obtain them. For this reason, a part of the expenses were borne by the institution, but Mr. Roosevelt paid all the expenses of himself and his son Kermit, presumably earning much of them by his articles in a magazine for which he received a record-breaking price.

Not wasting much time after leaving the White House, Colonel Roosevelt sailed from New York on the steamship Hamburg, headed for Naples. With him were Kermit and three naturalists, Major Mearns, Edmund Heller and J. Alden Loring, and stowed in the hold was most of their elaborate outfit for killing or photographing the animals of East Africa and for preserving the specimens destined for the Smithsonian Institution. Kermit had trained himself to be the chief photographer of the expedition, but he also turned out to be considerable of a hunter.

IN THE AFRICAN JUNGLE

A great throng of friends and admirers bade the colonel farewell, and he sailed away, but could not entirely separate himself from the world, for practically all the way across the Atlantic wireless communication with the Hamburg was maintained. Moreover, at the Azores, and again at Gibraltar, he found the officials and people insisted on doing him honor, and when he reached Naples on April 5 the entire populace turned out to greet him with flowers and cheers.

Boarding the German steamship Admiral for Mombasa, Mr. Roosevelt found in his cabin a quantity of flowers and a letter from Emperor William wishing him "good hunting." At Messina a stop was made to view the earthquake ruins, and there, at King Victor Emmanuel's request, Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit visited the Italian monarch on board the battleship Rex Umberto. The party arrived at Mombasa April 21 and was received by Acting Governor Jackson, who had been instructed by the British government to do all in his power to further the plans of the expedition. Unusual privileges were granted the hunters, and Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit were licensed to kill lions.

At Mombasa the party was joined by R. J. Cuninghame, a veteran African hunter and explorer, and Leslie J. Tarleton, and these two managed the expedition in a most able manner. Taking train to Kapitil plains, the party became the guests of Sir Alfred Pease on his ranch. An immense caravan of 260 persons was organized and on April 25 Colonel Roosevelt had his first African hunt. On this occasion he bagged two wildebeests and a Thompson's gazelle. April 30 was a notable day in the camp on the Athi, for on that day the first lions fell victims to the marksmanship of the Roosevelts. Theodore shot two and Kermit one, and there was great rejoicing among the natives who made up the caravan. After that the big game came fast and cheetahs, giraffes, rhinoceroses and more lions were added to the list, in all 14 varieties of animals being secured. Meanwhile Kermit was busy with his cameras and the naturalists prepared the specimens.

George McMillan, an American, was the next host of the hunters, and several weeks were spent on his fine Ju Ja ranch and in the surrounding country. There the game was very plentiful and many fine specimens were bagged. Members of the party made several extensive trips of exploration, notably on and around Mount Kenia.

The expedition left East Africa December 19, crossed Uganda and went down the White Nile, getting back to comparative civilization at Gondokoro. There they went aboard a steamer put at their disposal by the sirdar, and journeyed to Khartum, where Mrs. Roosevelt met her husband, and accompanied him in a leisurely trip to Cairo. During his stay in Egypt Colonel Roosevelt was the recipient of many honors and made several speeches. One of them, in which he praised the administration of the British, gave considerable offense to the native Nationalists. At the end of March the Roosevelts sailed for Italy.

In a preliminary report to the Smithsonian Institution Mr. Roosevelt summarized the material results of the expedition as follows:

"On the trip Mr. Heller has prepared 1,020 specimens of mammals, the majority of large size; Mr. Loring has prepared 3,153, and Doctor Mearns 714—a total of 4,897 mammals. Of birds, Doctor Mearns has prepared nearly 3,100, Mr. Loring 899, and Mr. Heller about fifty—a total of about 4,000 birds.

"Of reptiles and batrachians, Messrs. Mearns, Loring and Heller collected about 2,000.

"Of fishes, about 500 were collected. Doctor Mearns collected marine fishes near Mombasa, and fresh water fishes elsewhere in British East Africa, and he and Cuninghame collected fishes in the White Nile.

"This makes, in al, of vertebrates:

Mammals	4,897
Birds (about	4,000
Reptiles and batrachians (about)	2,000
Fishes (about)	500
Total	11,397

"The invertebrates were collected chiefly by Doctor Mearns, with some assistance from Messrs. Cuninghame and Kermit Roosevelt.

"A few marine shells were collected near Mombasa, and land and fresh-water shells throughout the regions visited, as well as crabs, beetles, millipeds, and other invertebrates.

"Several thousand plants were collected throughout the regions visited by Doctor Mearns, who employed and trained for the work a M'nyumnezi named Makangarri, who soon learned how to make very good specimens, and turned out an excellent man in every way.

"Anthropological materials were gathered by Doctor Mearns, with some assistance from others; a collection was contributed by Major Ross, an American in the government service at Nairobi."

To Remove a Paint Stain.

To remove the unsightly stain of paint spilled on the doorstep, try the following plan: Make a strong solution of potash and wet the stain well with this, keeping it wet until the paint becomes soft. In a short time it will readily rub loose and it may then be washed off with soap and water. If any color has penetrated the fibers of the wood keep the spot well wet with the solution, and it will shortly disappear. Paint which has been left on for some time will yield to this treatment.

AT A CRITICAL PERIOD

Of Peculiar Interest to Women.

Mrs. Mary I. Remington, Eigleberry St., Gilroy, Cal., says: "I suffered so severely from pain and soreness over the kidneys that it was a task for me to turn over in bed. My kidneys acted very frequently, but the secretions were retarded and the passages scalded. I was weak and run down. After taking other remedies without benefit, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and was permanently cured. I was going through the critical period of a woman's life at that time and after using Doan's Kidney Pills there was a miraculous change for the better in my health."

For Proper Care of Tuberculosis.

According to the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, New York state leads in the number of beds for consumptives provided up to May 1, with 5,475 beds; Massachusetts is second with 2,403 beds; Pennsylvania, third, with 2,347 beds; Colorado, fourth with 1,489 beds; and New Mexico fifth, with 1,104 beds. As yet, not one state in the country has made adequate provision for its consumptives. New York has set itself the task of having "No uncared-for Tuberculosis in 1915," and several cities in other parts of the country have adopted similar programs. The National association says that tuberculosis will not be stamped out until all cases of the disease are cared for either in their homes or in institutions. With this end in view, efforts will be made to increase the number of hospital beds in this country to at least 35,000 by May 1, 1911.

A Practical Discourse.

One stormy day the children were amusing themselves indoors, playing church. "Now, Florence," said Theodore, "I'll be the minister and tell you what you must do, and you'll be the people, and you must listen and do what I tell you." Climbing up on a chair, he began his sermon. "Florence, you must be a very good girl and do whatever your brother wants you to. If he wants your playthings, you must let him have them, and if you want any of his, you just let 'em alone."—Christian Herald.

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE
Medicine Not Needed in This Case.

It is hard to convince some people that coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that to some systems, coffee is an insidious poison that undermines the health.

Ask the doctor if coffee is the cause of constipation, stomach and nervous trouble.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life. I am now 42 years old and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading your advertisement of Postum, I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said: 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family, and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily and found in about two weeks' time I could sleep soundly at night and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 146 pounds when I commenced on Postum, and now I weigh 157 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were great coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before."

It Was His Turn.

Two weary travelers were compelled to seek lodging in a country hotel that was unpromising in looks at least. Upon conferring with the owner the prospects brightened.

"Certainly, gentlemen," he said, "I have one spare bed that the two of you may have—a large feather one. This way, please."

They followed and were loath to anticipate much ease, but accepted the only thing and retired. One was soon snoring long and loudly, the other could not sleep. At about 2 in the morning the wakeful one nudged his companion.

"Here, get up! Time's up," he said.

"What's the matter?" asked the other; "we are not on duty."

"No, but it's my turn to sleep on the feather," was the reply.

Aroused Sporting Instinct.

An Irish policeman who was also something of a sportsman, had been posted on a road near Dublin to catch the scorching motorist. Presently one came along at 20 miles an hour, and the policeman saw it pass without a sign. Next came a large motor traveling at 40 miles and hour, and the eyes of the guardian of the public brightened. And then one passed at the rate of a mile a minute. "Begorrah," said Pat, slapping his thigh, "that's the best of the lot."

It was a true, if not a happy phrase, when sponsor Wilson referred to "our God given young governor." But when he says: "He is one of the triumphs of our age—oh! tush!

The tariff plank of the Republican platform is a masterpiece of indirection. It is so broad that even a free trader might find a place to stand beside Senator Payne and Nelson Aldrich.

The chairman of the Ramsey county Republican convention in a moment of undue exuberance announced that "the state will soon be redeemed from the stigma of Democratic rule." Now, really, was Governor Johnson's administration a "stigma?"

Congressman Frank Nye of Minneapolis made a humorous speech in the house in which he landed Joe Cannon. If the voters in his district read it, and they probably will, they will very likely remember it about election time and then it will not seem half so funny to Mr. Nye, says the St. Cloud Times.

Irrespective of politics, the country newspaper boys are pleased over the success of Sam Y. Gordon in landing the nomination for lieutenant governor. Sam is a whole-souled fellow and considerable of a free-lance on public questions. He is to be congratulated upon winning a fight that was made against great odds.

Mr. Pruess says there can't be any question of Governor Eberhart's re-election (of course he ought to have said election)", but really unless Mr. Wheelock is made chairman of the state committee we are afraid the astute Mr. Day may somehow hornswoggle the common people into the belief that John Lind is pretty nearly as big a man as Eberhart.

The Northfield News says: "Don't stick up your nose at the King road drag. The only objection to it is that it is simple. It ought to have three or four fly wheels, fifty or sixty cogs and a few hundred coil springs attached to it. Then if $285 f. o. b. Chicago, were charged for it, it might come into general use. As it is, it is handicapped by cheapness. Nobody wants a road drag that only costs a few boards off the back yard fence, a bolt or two from the windmill and a fist full of skinned knuckles."

The many friends of Hon. Marcus Johnson will be pleased to learn that he has been appointed collector of customs for the district of Minnesota. This position pays a handsome salary and is considered the choicest federal plum that comes to the state. It is understood that Senator Clapp made the selection. Under the Harrison administration, twenty years ago, Mr. Johnson was collector of internal revenue.

Major John A. Pickler, the man who was the father of the rural free delivery, died on Monday at his home in Faulkton, S. D. While a member of congress from South Dakota, Major Pickler introduced the resolution which authorized the first free delivery of mail to farmers. He was a pioneer and leader in developing the state of South Dakota. At 21 he became a major in the civil war by his bravery.

Congress is about to retire Justice Moody of the supreme court on full pay, though he hasn't served the required time or reached the requisite age, says the Duluth Herald. But he is disabled by rheumatism and probably never can serve on the bench again. He needs the money and the country needs a full bench. His retirement is one of those public acts which are very good in themselves, but very bad when they constitute precedents.

The managers of Governor Eberhart's campaign have appropriated the Governor Johnson motto: "He has made good." It is now up to them to prove it. Perhaps he "made good" when he appointed temperance committees of the last two legislatures, or when the railroad and tax committees were given over to the interests. Or did he make "good" when he permitted the Seabury graft. The piracy of the motto may be immaterial, but it is not usually advisable to adopt a motto that has not always been adhered to.

Thomas A. Edison says that a large part of our heightened price of living comes from the cost of delivering small quantities to the ultimate consumer, and suggests the package form of food production and automatic stores as a partial remedy. Rent is another element which he proposes to correct by making his poured cement houses so cheap that the ordinary workingman can afford to have his own house. For $1200 he can put up a three story house with the same conveniences and room as a house built of cut stone that would cost $30,000. The "wizard of Menlo Park" is doing more for his race than the ordinary library-giving Carnegie or the whole tribe of college-endowing millionaires.

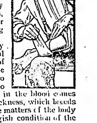
S.S.S. CURES OLD SORES



Every old sore is an infected spot on the flesh, kept open by constant drainage of impure blood into the place.

One of the principal constituents of blood is plasma, a healing property. Where the circulation is pure this element of the blood, which is of a glutinous or sticky nature, performs the necessary work in healing all sores, wounds and lacerations. It does this by sticking or joining the parts together, while nature causes a knitting of the tissues and solidifies the place.

This healing property is frequently destroyed by impure accumulations in the blood, and this vital fluid not only loses its power to heal, but becomes a source of irritation and disease to any open sore or ulcer on the body. Constantly it discharges its morbid matters into the place, and gradually it causes the infection to spread, and the sore enlarges. The morbid matter in the blood comes from different causes. A long spell of debilitating sickness, which breeds disease germs in the system, the retention of the refuse matters of the body because of a sluggish condition of the eliminative members, a continued malarial state of the system, inherited bad blood, etc., are usually responsible.

CURED OF EATING SORE.
Dear Sirs:—I was suffering greatly from a sore on my left breast, which had begun to eat, and at times deep, shooting pains would pass through it, and the ulcer was discharging yellow and rather offensive matter. I consulted physicians, but their treatment did not benefit me very much. My condition seemed hopeless, and I had almost despaired of getting well. I knew that the disease was hereditary in my case, as an only sister, my mother and two of her sisters had died of Cancer of the breast. After I had finished the first bottle of S. S. S. I felt some better, so continued it until I was cured.
MRS. JAMES CASSELL,
Belton, Mo.

S. S. S. heals sores and ulcers in the very simplest way. It just goes into the circulation, and removes the impurities and polluted matter that are the means of keeping the ulcer open; then the sore is bound to heal. S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and not only does it cleanse the circulation, but it adds every necessary property to it to promote good health. It is of the very greatest tonic value, and those who have been weakened and run down by the constitutional drainage of an old sore will find it the very remedy needed. S.S.S. does not simply cause a scab to come over an old sore, but beginning at the bottom it heals the place permanently by building new tissue and filling in the place with firm, healthy flesh. The Valley for Them.

Hermaa Krueger, and Chas. Wentzel and son Ed., have returned from a trip through Montana, Idaho, Colorado and Wyomiag. They traveled through these states, stopping at many places to investigate the possibilities for investments and openings for business is has been so optimistically described ia the profuse advertising that is being circueated. Mr. Krueger, in speaking of his trip, says that he is well satisfied at having taken the trip. He is now contented and satisfied that northern Minnesota is the best place to invest and remain in. There were a large number of persons who were interested in the findings of his and Mr. Wentzel's investigations, and will remain in Crookston. Mrs. Krueger went to St. Paul to meet him but was unable to return, on account of being taken ill there. She is at present visiting at the home of her brother, Adolph Wentzel, who resides in Minneapolis.—Crookston Times.

LAND IN CANADA AN INVESTMENT

WORK IT, AND SECURE 20 PER CENT. ON THE EXPENDITURE.

Farm lands in Canada increased in value this Spring from fifteen to twenty per cent, and as a result of this increase thousands of those who have gone there within the past few years have had that much more value added to their holdings. There is proof here that as a field for investment there is nowhere to be found a more profitable one than in purchasing farm lands in Canada. And, as a field for occupation and working the farms there is nowhere on the continent where more satisfactory return is given. The crops are always sure and the prices are always good. With railroads entering and traversing all the settled parts, there are very few districts in which the farmer will be more than from ten to twelve miles from a railway station. Roads are good, and big loads are easily handled. The price of getting grain to the primary market is low on this account, and then in reaching the world's markets the railways have their rates controlled by the Government, and what may be considered a fair deal is certain. Good prices for all kinds of grain is the rule, and if the investor has made good money by the increased value given to his unworked land, it is not difficult to understand that the profit to the man who works his land is just that much more, and there will be no depreciation. The man who holds a free homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he got for $10 as an entry fee, has land which at its lowest estimate is worth $10 an acre—yes, $15 an acre the moment he has completed his three years' residence duties. It will continue to increase in value until its earning power gives a reasonable interest on a certain sum. That is, if he takes off the land fifteen to twenty dollars per acre clear profit each year, his land is worth to him, at a fair rate of interest, $200 an acre. If he only realizes $10 an acre clear profit, it is worth $100 per acre. Now, thousands of farmers are duplicating these figures. The price of land in Canada today is much less than its realizing value. The fact that the fifty thousand Americans who went to Canada year before last were followed by one hundred thousand last year offers evidence, and good evidence, too, that there is getting to be a pretty fair knowledge that money is to be made in Canada lands. As an investment money is to be made, but more by living upon the land, secured either by homestead or purchase. The one hundred thousand of last year will be one hundred and fifty thousand this year. These comprise people from every state in the Union, and it is just being realized the asset that awaits the homeseeker in Canada. The large numbers that have gone, though, makes no appreciable difference in the supply of land. There is still left vast quantities of the best of it. But the longer a delay is made in arriving at a decision, the price will advance proportionately, and the more desirable homesteads near the railway lines become more difficult to secure. The Government publishes interesting literature, which may be had on application to any of the agents whose offices are located at different points through the States, and they (the agents) will be pleased to assist in any way possible in the choice of location.

The Rude Visitor.

There is a story about the secretary of a golf club who was a man of diminutive stature. It was summer time, and the grass had been allowed to grow rather long. The secretary was playing in front of a visitor who was a very long driver, and kept dropping his ball in the neighborhood of the secretary all the way round. At last the little man could stand it no longer and walked back and remonstrated with the visitor on his conduct, but the only reply he got was, "If you would cut the grass, one might be able to see you."

Would Mean a better Show.

"Johnny," said the teacher, "here is a book. Now, stand up straight and sing like a little man."

The song was "Nearer, My God." No sooner had the school commenced to sing than a little girl waved her hand frantically. Stopping the singing, the teacher inquired the cause.

"Please, teacher, I think Johnny will get nearer if he whistles."—Judge.

ROYAL WELCOME FOR ROOSEVELT

Vast Throng Greets the Former President at New York.

HE IS MET AT QUARANTINE

Escorted to the Battery by a Great Flotilla—Speeches and Land Parade—Affair Is Spontaneous and Non-Partisan.

New York.—He has come back!

Theodore Roosevelt returned to his native land June 18, and was given a welcome home such as was never before accorded to a citizen of this republic. The whole country joined in it, and it was so spontaneous and so utterly non-partisan that it could not but be most flattering to the former president.

Since emerging from the African jungle the latter part of March, Mr. Roosevelt has been the guest of nearly every European ruler and almost unprecedented honors have been heaped on him. The reception by his fellow citizens was a fitting climax to his triumphal tour and must have been the most satisfactory event connected with it.

BEFORE AND AFTER THE TRIP

Flotilla Meets Him at Quarantine.

More than a month ago every available craft in New York harbor had been engaged for the day, and numerous big organizations, like the Republican club of New York and the Hamilton club of Chicago, had chartered regular coast line steamers. Early in the morning this immense flotilla sailed far down the bay, and when, about 9 o'clock, the scouting tugs and motor boats came flying in with the word that the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria was approaching, all made ready for the first greeting.

As the big liner came into sight, every whistle on every vessel was tied open and shrieked the welcome to the returning wanderer. Colonel Roosevelt, with Mrs. Roosevelt and Kermit by his side, stood on the deck, waving his hand and smiling the familiar smile, and the waiting thousands cheered him again and again.

THE VOYAGER HOMEWARD BOUND

Reception Committee Takes Him.

At Quarantine the necessary formalities were quickly over and the official reception committee took the colonel and his party aboard its revenue cutter. That vessel at once started up the harbor and all the gaily decorated craft, filled with clubs and private parties, fell in behind and formed a most spectacular water parade. On almost every boat was a band, and all the way the musicians played at the top of their lungs. The shores were black with people who shouted their greetings to "Teddy" as he passed and the factories and mills added the noise of their whistles to the general din.

So it went all the way up to Twenty-third street, where the parade turned and made its way back to the Battery. At that historic spot at the lower end of Manhattan island Colonel Roosevelt landed to receive the formal welcome home.

Welcomed by Mayor Gaynor.

In an enclosure in the center of Battery park were 200 distinguished guests, including senators, representatives, ambassadors and close personal friends of Mr. Roosevelt. Surrounding this enclosure was another reserved space which was occupied by about 2,500 prominent men and members of the big reception committee.

The cheering and music were almost continuous as the colonel entered the park, but finally quiet was restored and Mayor Gaynor stepped forward and delivered a cordial address of welcome on behalf of the nation and the city. Mr. Roosevelt responded briefly but feelingly, and short speeches were made by several other prominent men. Much as he would have liked to be present to greet his predecessor, President Taft was kept away on account of his official position and by a previous engagement.

Parade Through the City.

When the speech making was over, the parade through the city streets started. It was originally intended to conclude the reception with a monster parade, and invitations were issued to various organizations throughout the country. Within a few days, however, the committee was flooded with so many applications that the parade feature had to be in part abandoned. Organizations from Maine to California and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes requested places in the line of march, and if the project had been carried out, the procession would have extended from the Battery to the Harlem river and back again, a distance of 20 miles, and the people who had traveled hundreds of miles to see Roosevelt would have been deprived of the pleasure. In order to overcome this obstacle so that no one would be offended, a unique arrangement was adopted by the committee. All organizations that wished to participate in the parade were assigned certain blocks along the line of march; for instance, one or two blocks were assigned to some visiting club, and the next to the public, and so on.

The procession itself was comparatively small and was led by the mounted police of New York, who were followed by the police band on foot. Then came the escort of 500 Rough Riders under the command of Robert Hunter of Oklahoma city, president of the organization. Colonel Roosevelt came next in a carriage, and his carriage was followed by a long procession of vehicles containing the members of the committee and the speakers.

TREATED AS FIRST AMERICAN OF TIME

Theodore Roosevelt Most Highly Honored in Europe.

EXCITING INCIDENT IN ROME

Former President Delivered Scholarly Lectures in Paris, Berlin and Oxford—Represented His Country at King Edward's Funeral.

Scarcely less interesting than his hunting trip in Africa, and at times almost as exciting, were the adventures of Col. Theodore Roosevelt in Europe. There he desired to be treated as a man of letters and science, rather than as a sportsman, and his desire was gratified. But in addition, Europe insisted on receiving him as the most distinguished American of the time, and everywhere he went honors were showered on him. Emperors, kings, princes and all manner of royalties and nobility greeted him, dined him and toasted him, and the people in all the lands that he visited turned out in vast throngs to see him and cheer him.

In Paris, Christiania, Berlin and Oxford Mr. Roosevelt delivered scholarly public addresses and the literary and scientific circles opened to let him in and marveled at the wide scope of his knowledge.

The event connected with Mr. Roosevelt's European tour that aroused the most interest and excitement occurred immediately after his arrival in Italy early in April. Before he left Africa his desire to pay his respects to the pope had been conveyed to the Vatican and the holy father had intimated that he would be glad to see the distinguished American. About the same time former Vice-President Fairbanks was in Rome and had arranged for an audience at the Vatican which was canceled by the pope because Mr. Fairbanks first addressed the Methodist mission in Rome. When Colonel Roosevelt reached the Eternal City he received, through the American minister, a message from Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state, to the effect that the pope would grant an audience to Mr. Roosevelt if he did not repeat the mistake made by Mr. Fairbanks. The colonel promptly called it all off, stating that as an independent American citizen he could not submit to such restrictions. The head of the Methodist mission tried to make religious capital out of this, and Mr. Roosevelt thereupon canceled the plans for a general reception to which the Methodists had been invited. Thus, with his usual luck and facility for "coming out on top," he had the best of the matter all around and his conduct was generally commended all over the world.

COL. ROOSEVELT IN VENICE

Leaving the Sorbonne, Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt and Kermit were received by the king and queen of Italy and spent some days in that country. The colonel and his wife visited Venice and traveled once again the Riviera route that they passed over on their honeymoon, and next Mr. Roosevelt visited Vienna and Budapest, where he was given a royal welcome.

Paris was next on his itinerary, and there on April 23 he lectured in the Sorbonne before a great audience of savants and students. The municipality and its officials, the president of France and various learned societies vied with each other in doing honor to the visitor, and for amusement he was taken to the field of aviation, where he saw some exciting aeroplane flights.

Traveling northward somewhat leisurely, by way of Brussels, Amsterdam and Copenhagen, Mr. Roosevelt arrived at Christiania and delivered an address on international peace before the Nobel prize commission, which had awarded to him the Nobel peace prize for his successful efforts to end the Russian-Japanese war.

Emperor William had made great plans for the entertainment of the ex-president in Berlin, but the death of King Edward caused the curtailment of the program to a considerable extent. Instead of being the kaiser's guest in the palace, Mr. Roosevelt stopped at the American embassy, and though William received him and dined him and showed him the German army in maneuvers, the more spectacular and public features were omitted. On May 12 Mr. Roosevelt delivered at the University of Berlin an address on modern civilization which was highly praised for its scholarly qualities.

Taking the Air in Austria.

Having been appointed special ambassador of the United States to attend the funeral of King Edward, Colonel Roosevelt next crossed the channel to England, and when the body of the dead monarch was carried to the tomb he was one of the remarkable crowd of royal personages and distinguished men that followed the gun carriage on which Edward's coffin was borne. After the funeral he was received by King George and Queen Mary and by the widowed queen mother, and in a quiet way made necessary by the mourning of the nation much attention was shown him. This culminated, in London, by a reception in the Guild Hall, at which the freedom of the city in a gold casket was presented to him.

He was the guest, thereafter, of several prominent Englishmen, and on June 7 he delivered the Romanes lecture at Oxford, which had been postponed by the demise of the king. This was the most pretentious of all his European addresses and the best. His subject was "Biological Analogies in History."

The University of Cambridge honored Mr. Roosevelt by conferring upon him the degree of doctor of laws, and the occasion served to demonstrate his popularity with all classes. As Mr. Roosevelt accepted his diploma from the hands of Vice-Chancellor Mason, the students who crowded the galleries shouted "Teddy! Teddy!" and let down a large Teddy bear from the ceiling. The whole audience cheered and the colonel, as he passed out, smilingly patted the Teddy bear. Later that day Mr. Roosevelt addressed 700 graduates, on all kinds of topics.

Potato growers should follow a system of rotation in which potatoes follow clover on a carefully prepared seed bed.

Soil that has produced a crop of scabby potatoes should be used for some other crop for several years because the scab spores live over in the soil and will attack subsequent potato crops for five or six years afterward. For potatoes select, if possible, a northern slope, since the crop will suffer less on such slope during hot, dry weather.

A potent reason for retaining old sows is that they usually farrow more and larger pigs than young ones.

THE GREAT STRUGGLE

The Civil war was the most momentous struggle of history. It operated through fifteen imperial states, over more than 600,000 square miles. Its armies were unparalleled—2,000,000 as brave and intelligent men as ever gathered for mortal strife. Grant alone commanded more soldiers than Napoleon ever saw.

Its leaders were unsurpassed—McClelland, the magnificent; Hancock, the superb; Logan, the dashing; Thomas, the conservative; Meade, the self-reliant; Hooker, the fighter; Sheridan, the relentless; Sherman, the strategist; Farragut, the peerless admiral; Seward, the statesman; Sumner, the philanthropist; Stanton, the man of iron will; Chase, the financier; Greeley, the journalist; Beecher, the preacher; Phillips, the orator; Whittier, the bard, and above all these, the mightiest military chieftain of modern times—the silent man of destiny—U. S. Grant.

Tea Time Talks
The Tea of the Traveled

The traveler who visits England or Canada with the home-grown notion that any tea is tea usually comes back deeply impressed with the idea that tea is not tea unless it's "Salada." If he has been used to drinking Japan or China Tea before his travels, he will, on his return, insist on "Salada" Green, because of its unforgetable flavor and fragrance.

The widespread enjoyment of "Salada" Ceylon Tea is due to the fact that soil, climate, culture, preparation, purity and packing all unite to create the choicest tea possible to grow.

SAVED OLD LADY'S HAIR

"My mother used to have a very bad humor on her head which the doctors called an eczema, and for it I had two different doctors. Her head was very sore and her hair nearly all fell out in spite of what they both did. One day her niece came in and they were speaking of how her hair was falling out and the doctors did it no good. She says, 'Aunt, why don't you try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment?' Mother did and they helped her. In six months' time the itching, burning and scaling of her head was over and her hair began growing. Today she feels much in debt to Cuticura Soap and Ointment for the fine head of hair she has for an old lady of seventy-four.

"My own case was an eczema in my feet. As soon as the cold weather came my feet would itch and burn and then they would crack open and bleed. Then I thought I would flee to my mother's friends, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I did for four or five winters, and now my feet are as smooth as any one's. "'Do you think I'll have a strong beard? My father has a very strong one.'

"'It looks to me,' said the barber, 'as though you took after your mother.'"

Why Jones Was Sad.

Jones' rich grandmother died and Jones seemed unnaturally depressed [illegible]. His friends tried to cheer him.

"[illegible] left a last will and testament, I [illegible]," said Jenkins carelessly.

"Oh, yes," said Jones raising his head at last, "she left a will and testament."

"Ah," chimed in Brown, "you were always a friend of hers! Of course your name was mentioned."

"Yes," answered Jones, bursting into floods of tears, "my name was mentioned, boys. I—I am to have—"

They hung expectant, while more sobs choked back his words.

"I," he declared at last, "am to have the testament!"—Scraps.

Children.

Listen to this opinion from David Starr Jordan:

"There is nothing in all the world so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you ever wish to go in for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use in the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can dress the sore, bandage the wounded, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save a child. If the great army of philanthropists ever exterminate sin and pestilence, ever work out our race's salvation, it will be because a little child has led them."—[illegible]

THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE

SYNOPSIS.

Miss Innes, spinster and guardian of Gertrude and Halsey, established summer headquarters at Sunnyside. Amidst numerous difficulties the servants deserted. As Miss Innes locked up for the night, she was startled by a dark figure on the veranda. She passed a terrible night, which was filled with unseemly noises. In the morning Miss Innes found a strange link cuff button in a clothes hamper. Gertrude and Halsey arrived with Jack Bailey. The house was awakened by a revolver shot. A strange man was found shot to death in the hall. It proved to be the body of Arnold Armstrong, whose banker father owned the country house. Miss Innes found Halsey's revolver on the lawn. He and Jack Bailey had disappeared. The link cuff button mysteriously disappeared. Detective Jamieson and the coroner arrived. Gertrude revealed that she was engaged to Jack Bailey, with whom she had talked in the billiard room a few moments before the murder.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

"The quarrel, I believe," he persisted, "was about Mr. Armstrong's conduct to you, Miss Gertrude. He had been paying you unwelcome attentions."

And I had never seen the man!

When she nodded a "yes" I saw the tremendous possibilities involved. If this detective could prove that Gertrude feared and disliked the murdered man, and that Mr. Armstrong had been annoying and possibly pursuing her with hateful attentions, all that, added to Gertrude's confession of her presence in the billiard room at the time of the crime, looked strange, to say the least. The prominence of the family assured a strenuous effort to find the murderer, and if we had nothing worse to look forward to, we were sure of a distasteful publicity.

Mr. Jamieson shut his note-book with a snap and thanked us.

"I have an idea," he said, apropos of nothing at all, "that at any rate the ghost is laid here. Whatever the rappings have been—and the colored man says they began when the family went west three months ago—they are likely to stop now."

Which shows how much he knew about it. The ghost was not laid; with the murder of Arnold Armstrong he, or it, only seemed to take on fresh vigor.

Mr. Jamieson left then, and when Gertrude had gone upstairs, as she did at once, I sat and thought over what I had just heard. Her engagement, once so engrossing a matter, paled now beside the significance of her story. If Halsey and Jack Bailey had left before the crime, how came Halsey's revolver in the tulip bed? What was the mysterious cause of their sudden flight? What had Gertrude left in the billiard room? What was the significance of the cuff-link and where was it?

CHAPTER VI.

In the East Corridor.

When the detective left he enjoined absolute secrecy on everybody in the household. The Greenwood club promised the same thing, and as there are no Sunday afternoon papers, the murder was not publicly known until Monday. The coroner himself notified the Armstrong family lawyer, and early in the afternoon he came out. I had not seen Mr. Jamieson since morning, but I knew he had been interrogating the servants. Gertrude was locked in her room with a headache, and I had luncheon alone.

Mr. Harton, the lawyer, was a little, thin man, and he looked as if he did not relish his business that day.

"This is very unfortunate, Miss Innes," he said, after we had shaken hands. "Most unfortunate—and mysterious. With the father and mother in the west, I find everything devolves on me; and, as you can understand, it is an unpleasant duty."

"No doubt," I said absently. "Mr. Harton, I am going to ask you some questions, and I hope you will answer them. I feel that I am entitled to some knowledge, because I and my family are just now in a most ambiguous position."

I don't know whether he understood me or not; he took off his glasses and wiped them.

"I shall be very happy," he said with old-fashioned courtesy.

"Thank you. Mr. Harton, did Mr. Arnold Armstrong know that Sunnyside had been rented?"

"I think—yes, he did. In fact, I myself told him about it."

"And he knew who the tenants were?"

"Yes."

"He had not been living with the family for some years, I believe?"

"No. Unfortunately, there had been trouble between Arnold and his father. For two years he had lived in town."

"Then it would be unlikely that he came here last night to get possession of anything belonging to him?"

"I should think it hardly possible," he admitted. "To be perfectly frank, Miss Innes, I can not think of any reason whatever for his coming here as he did. He had been staying at the club house across the valley for the last week, Jarvis tells me, but that only explains how he came here, not why. It is a most unfortunate family."

He shook his head despondently, and I felt that this dried-up little man was the repository of much that he had not told me. I gave up trying to elicit any information from him, and we went together to view the body before it was taken to the city. It had been lifted on to the billiard-table and a sheet thrown over it; otherwise nothing had been touched. A soft hat lay beside it, and the collar of the dinner-coat was still turned up. The handsome, dissipated face of Arnold Armstrong, purged of its ugly lines, was now only pathetic. As we went in Mrs. Watson appeared at the card-room door.

"The Quarrel, I Believe."

"Come in, Mrs. Watson," the lawyer said. But she shook her head and withdrew; she was the only one in the house who seemed to regret the dead man, and even she seemed rather shocked than sorry.

Before Mr. Harton left, he told me something of the Armstrong family. Paul Armstrong, the father, had been married twice. Arnold was a son by the first marriage. The second Mrs. Armstrong had been a widow, with a child, a little girl. This child, now perhaps 20, was Louise Armstrong, having taken her stepfather's name, and was at present in California with the family.

"They will probably return at once," he concluded, "and part of my errand here to-day is to see if you will relinquish your lease here in their favor."

"We would better wait and see if they wish to come," I said. "It seems unlikely, and my town house is being remodeled." At that he let the matter drop, but it came up unpleasantly enough, later.

At six o'clock the body was taken away, and at seven-thirty, after an early dinner, Mr. Harton went. Gertrude had not come down, and there was no news of Halsey. Mr. Jamieson had taken a lodging in the village, and I had not seen him since mid-afternoon. It was about nine o'clock, I think, when the bell rang and he was ushered into the living room.

"Sit down," I said grimly. "Have you found a clew that will incriminate me, Mr. Jamieson?"

He had the grace to look uncomfortable. "No," he said. "If you had killed Mr. Armstrong, you would have left no clew. You would have had too much intelligence."

After that we got along better. He was fishing in his pocket, and after a minute he brought out two scraps of paper. "I have been to the club-house," he said, "and among Mr. Armstrong's effects, I found these. One is curious; the other is puzzling."

The first was a sheet of club note-paper on which was written, over and over, the name "Halsey B. Innes." It was Halsey's flowing signature to a dot, but it lacked Halsey's ease. The ones toward the bottom of the sheet were much better than the top ones. Mr. Jamieson smiled at my face.

"His old tricks," he said. "This one, as I said before, is puzzling."

The second scrap, folded and refolded into a compass so tiny that the writing had been partly obliterated, was part of a letter—the lower half of a sheet, not typed, but written in a cramped hand.

——by altering the plans for—— rooms, may be possible. The best way, in my opinion, would be to——the plan for——in one of the——rooms——chimney.

That was all.

"Well?" I said, looking up. "There is nothing in that, is there? A man ought to be able to change the plan of his house without becoming an object of suspicion."

"There is little in the paper itself," he admitted; "but why should Arnold Armstrong carry that around, unless it meant something? He never built a house, you may be sure of that. If it is this house, it may mean anything from a secret room—"

"To an extra bathroom," I said scornfully. "Haven't you a thumb-print, too?"

"I have," he said with a smile, "and the print of a foot in a tulip bed, and a number of other things. The oddest part is, Miss Innes, that the thumb-mark is probably yours and the footprint certainly."

His audacity was the only thing that saved me; his amused smile put me on my mettle, and I ripped out a perfectly good scallop before I answered.

"Why did I step into the tulip bed?" I asked with interest.

"You picked up something," he said good-humoredly, "which you are going to tell me about later."

"Am I, indeed?" I was politely curious. "With this remarkable insight of yours, I wish you would tell me where I shall find my four-thousand-dollar motorcar."

"I was just coming to that," he said. "You will find it about 30 miles away, at Andrews Station, in a blacksmith shop, where it is being repaired."

I laid down my knitting then and looked at him.

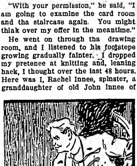
"And Halsey?" I managed to say.

"We are going to exchange information," he said. "I am going to tell you that, when you tell me what you picked up in the tulip bed."

We looked steadily at each other; it was not an unfriendly stare; we were only measuring weapons. Then he smiled a little and got up.

"With your permission," he said, "I am going to examine the card room and the staircase again. You might think over my offer in the meantime."

He went on through the drawing room, and I listened to his footsteps growing gradually fainter. I dropped my pretence at knitting and, leaning back, I thought over the last 48 hours. Here was I, Rachel Innes, spinster, a granddaughter of old John Innes of revolutionary days, a D. A. R., a Colonial Dame, mixed up with a vulgar and revolting crime, and even attempting to hoodwink the law! Certainly I had left the straight and narrow way.



Bolted Down Stairs, Three at a Time.

I was roused by hearing Mr. Jamieson coming rapidly back through the drawing room. He stopped at the door.

"Miss Innes," he said quickly, "will you come with me and light the east corridor? I have fastened somebody in the small room at the head of the card room stairs."

I jumped up at once.

"You mean—the murderer?" I gasped.

"Possibly," he said quietly, as we hurried together up the stairs. "Some one was lurking on the staircase when I went back. I spoke; instead of an answer, whoever it was turned and ran up. I followed—it was dark—but as I turned the corner at the top a figure darted through this door and closed it. The bolt was on my side, and I pushed it forward. It is a closet, I think." We were in the upper hall now. "If you will show me the electric switch, Miss Innes, you would better wait in your own room."

Trembling as I was, I was determined to see that door opened. I hardly knew what I feared, but so many terrible and inexplicable things had happened that suspense was worse than certainty.

"I am perfectly cool," I said, "and I am going to remain here."

The lights flashed up along that end of the corridor, throwing the doors into relief. At the intersection of the small hallway with the larger, the circular staircase wound its way up, as if it had been an afterthought of the architect. And just around the corner, in the small corridor, was the door Mr. Jamieson had indicated. I was still unfamiliar with the house, and I did not remember the door. My heart was thumping wildly in my ears, but I nodded to him to go ahead. I was perhaps eight or ten feet away—and then he threw the bolt back.

"Come out," he said quietly. There was no response. "Come—out," he repeated. Then—I think he had a revolver, but I am not sure—he stepped aside and threw the door open.

From where I stood I could not see beyond the door, but I saw Mr. Jamieson's face change and heard him mutter something, then he bolted down the stairs, three at a time. When my knees had stopped shaking, I moved forward, slowly, nervously, until I had a partial view of what was beyond the door. It seemed at first to be a closet, empty. Then I went close and examined it, to stop with a shudder. Where the floor should have been was black void and darkness, from which came the indescribable damp smell of the cellars.

Mr. Jamieson had locked somebody in the clothes chute. As I leaned over I fancied I heard a groan—or was it the wind?

CHAPTER VII.

A Sprained Ankle.

I was panic-stricken. As I ran along the corridor I was confident that the mysterious intruder and probable murderer had been found, and that he lay dead or dying at the foot of the chute. I got down the staircase somehow, and through the kitchen to the basement stairs. Mr. Jamieson had been before me, and the door stood open. Liddy was standing in the middle of the kitchen holding a frying pan by the handle as a weapon.

"Don't go down there," she yelled, when she saw me moving toward the basement stairs. "Don't you do it, Miss Rachel. That Jamieson's down there now. There's only trouble comes of hunting ghosts; they lead you into bottomless pits and things like that. Oh, Miss Rachel, don't—" as I tried to get past her.

She was interrupted by Mr. Jamieson's reappearance. He ran up the stairs two at a time, and his face was flushed and furious.

"The whole place is locked," he said angrily. "Where's the laundry key kept?"

"It's kept in the door," Liddy snapped. "That whole end of the cellar is kept locked, so nobody can get at the clothes, and then the key's left in the door, so that unless a thief was as blind as—as some detectives, he could walk right in."

"Liddy," I said sharply, "come down with us and turn on all the lights."

She offered her resignation, as usual, on the spot, but I took her by the arm, and she came along finally. She switched on all the lights and pointed to a door just ahead.

"That's the door," she said sulkily. "The key's in it."

But the key was not in it. Mr. Jamieson shook it, but it was a heavy door, well locked. And then he stooped and began punching around the keyhole with the end of a lead pencil. When he stood up his face was exultant.

"It's locked on the inside," he said in a low tone. "There is somebody in there."

"Lord have mercy!" gasped Liddy, and turned to run.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Women in Postal Service

The distinction of first appointing a woman postmaster does not belong to America, nor is the employment of women in the postal service a new idea. As early as 1548 a woman postmaster was appointed to look after the mails of Braine le Comte, an important town of France. In the trying times of the Thirty Years' War the principal office in the postal service of Europe was held by a woman, Alexandrine de Rue. From 1628 to 1646 she was in charge of the mails of the German empire, the Netherlands, Burgundy and Lorraine. She was known as a master general of the mails. In America, Elizabeth Harvey was the first to hold a place in the postal department. She had charge of the letters in Portsmouth, N. H., in the beginning of the seventeenth century. A half century afterward Lydia Hill was placed in charge of the post office in Salem, Mass.

Where It Goes.

"That man made an immense fortune out of a simple little invention."

"Indeed! What did he invent?"

"Invent? Nothing, you dub! He was the promoter."

Trouble.

If people were as resolute in reducing their wants as they are in increasing their demands, the world's worst troubles would quickly disappear.

Docile Cheese.

Andrew Carnegie, while eating with appetite and courage last month the dishes cooked by the young girls of the Margaret Morrison school in Pittsburg, said:

"I have no fear before these experimental dishes. He who has eaten in France learns to eat boldly.

"Think of the French cheeses alone!

"Why, one afternoon in a restaurant in the Boulevard des Italiens, I heard a guest shout angrily:

"'Waiter, look here, this cheese is walking all over the table!'

"'Ah, have no fear, monsieur. It won't escape,' the waiter replied. 'If it goes too far, just call "Jules, Jules!" It always answers to its name.'"

Willing to Help.

"If we didn't have the children," she bitterly declared, "I'd get a divorce from you."

"I'll write and see if I can't get my folks to take them."

Something Lacking.

"Disappointed in Venice, with its romantic lagoons and canals?"

"Well, there wasn't any place to shoot the chutes."

Crude, But Comforting.

"You are having a lot of fun with that kite of yours," said the neighbor.

"Yes," replied Ben Franklin, "there's a great deal of satisfaction in getting a little long distance electricity without being told that the line's busy."

Cook in Comfort

You no longer need wear yourself out with the weakening heat of an intensely hot kitchen. You can cook in comfort.

Here is a stove that gives no outside heat. All its heat is concentrated at the burners. An intense blue flame (hotter than either white or red) is thrown upwards but not around. All the heat is utilized in cooking — none in outside heating.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

entirely removes the discomfort of cooking. Apply a match and immediately the stove is ready. Instantly an intense heat is projected upwards against the pot, pan, kettle or boiler, and yet there is no surrounding heat—no smell—no smoke.

Why? Because The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is scientifically and practically perfect. You cannot use too much wick—it is automatically controlled. You get the maximum heat—no smoke. The burner is simple. One wipe with a cloth cleans it—consequently there is no smell.

The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is wonderful for year-round use, but especially in summer. Its heat operates upward to pan, pot, or kettle, but not beyond or around. It is useless for heating a room.

It has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

Colorado Lands Richer Than Gold Mines

There are bigger profits in eastern Colorado in proportion to the cost of land than almost anywhere else. Colorado's agricultural products are more than double the value of its mines.

Irrigation is unnecessary. By deep plowing and continual shallow cultivation the soil never dries out during the growing season, making big crops and surprising profits on $5.00 to $20.00 land.

What Some Men Have Done:

One man raised enough potatoes on 12 acres to buy 160 acres. Another man makes affidavit that he has not lost a crop in fifteen years.

Without irrigation one man's 800 cherry trees brought him $900. Five hundred plum trees produced $225. One hundred apple trees gave 300 bushels, $150; 1,400 currant bushes, three years old, yielded $225.

Hogs raised on alfalfa, fattened on corn (also raised on the same farm), cost $4 per head (including first cost of parent stock) and sell at top prices.

It's a great dairy and poultry country where dairy cows thrive on natural grasses.

The climate of eastern Colorado is the healthiest in the world. It makes healthy families and prolific crops. Good churches, good schools and splendid markets close at hand.

Combine business with pleasure. Enjoy an inexpensive vacation among the Colorado Rockies and all these wonderful lands along the Rock Island Lines on the way. Now is the time to go. See for yourself what a delightful section it is.

L. A. Nolson, Marcus Marshall, Ray Lindquist and Homer F. Mussey have returned from Lake City where they hed heen ia camp with company L of Thiof River Falls. Sheriff Nelson got away from Lake City a few duys hefore the company broke camp and escaped a thirty day guard house sentence oa the plea that it was necessary for him to attend the sheriff's meeting at Duluth. The sheriffs, as a part of the entertainmeat provided for them, were given a bout ride, and Nelson was a central figure on shipboard, and about him many less important personages gathered that they too might be shot hy the camera friends —uutil Nelsoa rushed to the side of the boat and surrendered to the waves that for which they had been clamoring. Then Nelson insisted that he wanted to die; he was determiaed to die. It took most of the sturdy officers of the law oa hoard to keep him under control until the ship headed into port— and Nelson still lives. Next time he's going to servo out the guardhouse sentence.

A one percent grade on a read means a rise of one foot for each hundred feet of distance traveled up the hill. A ten per cent grade means ten feet rise in each hundred feet so traveled. A one percent grade then, means that in traveling up hill one mile an ascent is made of 52.8 feet whilo a ten per cent grade means a rise in altitude of 528 feet in a mile. Accurate tests have shown tho Minnesota Experiment Station that a horse which can pull 11,000 pounds on a lovel road can pull only 81 pounds on a rise of one foot in fifty, and on a riso of one foot in ten he can pull only 250 pounds. These facts show that the greatest load thut can be hauled over a road is tho load which can be taken up tho steepest hill on that road or thrrough the deepest mudhole. It is therefore addvised that all highways traveled by heavily loadep vehicles should be kept within a three or four per cent grado if practicable. To do this may requiro a ehange of location to got aronnd bills, always keepping in mind that the lower the grade the larger the load may be hauled and tho cost of haulage kept at the lowest point.

Platform Writing.

Mr. [illegible] some suggestions [illegible] the state platform [illegible] as much as [illegible] state in July. [illegible] will be [illegible] time-honored Democratic principles. "If our party [illegible] remains loyal to the fundamental principles of Democracy [illegible] of right and opportunity [illegible] policy and accords to [illegible] division of the state the right to adopt such regulations [illegible] the people deem most conducive to their welfare we shall deserve victory and in attaining it I believe that we shall have the cooperation of all our people who stand for progress and social progress." About Off-handed Speeches.

Representative Nye of Minneapolis has come to find a pretty kettle of fish stewing. Nobody likes better than Frank to be a good fellow and in Washington his speeches of appreciation of Mr. Cannon's many endearing qualities won him great favor in Stalwart Republican congressional circles and among the boys in the smoking room. But since he came back he finds it different, and he is beginning to pledge. Of his last effort developed just before the close of congress he says: "I didn't mean it; and any one who reads it will see that I didn't mean it. It was an off-handed speech." That reminds me of what Mark Twain said, when complemented on an extempore address. "Oh, yes, he replied. "I make an excellent extempore speech. You see I take great care to prepare it beforehand." Not only is there intervale evidence of this habit in Mr. Nye's address, but any one who will consult the congressional record will see not only that it was carefully prepared, but that it was held back for revision.

A Change of Heart.

Representative Stevens too has discovered since he came back to St. Paul that Mr. Cannon as a candidate for speaker is impossible. It is peculiar how light breaks in on the minds of our representatives as soon as they touch Minnesota soil. In Washington it was different. Not only did Mr. Stevens vote there for Mr. Cannon every chance he got, but he was one of the noble band of patriots who went down to defeat with Uncle Joe in defence of the rules which made him the absolute autocrat of the house.

Steenerson Outspoken.

However perhaps one shouldn't say that about all of them. It seems to be different with Mr. Steenerson about some things at least. While in Minnesota he hesitated about voting for Mr. Cannon, indeed won't do it at all, he still sees in the Payne-Aldrich bill the best ever. "It is," said he, "a much better measure than the one whose place it took. It is a general reduction downward." When Ole gets through plowing I suspect we are likely to hear something more of interest about this tariff which is very much in general a revision downward. Perhaps, however, by the time Mr. Steenerson penetrates the interior as far west as Fergus Falls like Mr. Nye and Mr. Stevens, a doubt may have arisen in his mind on that subject. Why indeed if the tariff is in general a revision downward, and as such is to be commended, did Mr. Steenerson vote against it.

Wanted a Campaign Manager.

I understand that the Republican machine managers are in no end of a funk as to who shall be chairman of the Republican State Central Committee. There are indications that the governor has gone back on Ed. Smith who was half promised the job. It will be remembered that during the convention Ed. was sneaking in his tent and never showed up until the last minute. The trouble appears to be to find some one to do the job who hasn't got a string to him. The present design appears to get some one of whom to make a representative figurehead and then turn over the real work to the governor's executive clerk, Mr. Preus, who has for some time been coaching the governor. Of course he will have counsel from the inner circle but that will be distinctly sub rosa.

Fixing the Courts.

The sentiment appears to becoming more general that the Republicans made their biggest mistake in the convention by their failure to endorse Judge O'Brien and make a stand for a nonpartisan judiciary. There were, of course, reasons why, the management of the Republican party being subject to the influence which controls it, those who manipulated the convention should have left Mr. O'Brien off the state ticket. However, except with regard to the supreme bench the convention got out of the hands of the bosses for the most part and now, looking back, the older leaders think it almost a pity that the only concessons made should have been in favor of the railroads and the steel trust. There is a good deal of anxiety lest it become generally known what was really behind the reconstruction of the supreme bench.

BOB DUNN'S TALK ON GOOD ROADS

Princeton Editor's Address at the Big Meeting at Crookston.

Robert C. Dunn of Princeton discussed in a comprehensive manner at the Northern Minnesota Development Congress two proposed amendments to the state constitution. He took strong ground against the adoption of chapter 509, laws of 1909, referring to reapportionment, and vigorously supported the amendment concerning roads and bridges. On the question of good roads he said, in part:

"If all the money levied for road purposes were intelligently expended there would be a vast improvement in the condition of the highways of the state. In many counties, especially in Southeastern Minnesota, splendid work is being done in bettering the roads. But I think you will hear me out in the assertion that a great deal of money is wasted through lack of knowledge in the science of roadmaking on the part of the local boards and overseers of highways. Of course, you all know that I am a staunch advocate of the enactment and submission of a constitutional amendment which will provide for the levying of a general 1-mill state road tax and I hope you will send no man to the legislature from this section of the state who is not heartily in favor of that proposition. By the time such an amendment can be submitted and adopted the valuation of the state will have increased to at least $1,250,000,000. A 1-mill tax on that amount would produce a revenue of $1,250,000, 60 per cent of which would be paid by the counties of St. Louis, Hennepin and Ramsey; the United States Steel corporation alone would pay one-fifth of the entire amount.

"There are eighty-five counties in the state and each would receive on an average $15,000 a year. That 3 per cent constitutional proviso would of itself guarantee an equitable distribution of the fund. The money would be expended under the supervision of the state highway commission.

> "Presuming that a county would expend a like amount—$15,000—$30,000 ought to construct twenty miles of fairly good permanent roads. In a county containing 1,000 miles of alleged roads, twenty miles seem but a drop in the bucket, but there are many counties at the present time that have not even twenty miles of good roads.

"It is not to be expected that the state can build good roads to every farmer's dooryard. Twenty miles of good roads is a valuable asset in itself, but it would prove far more valuable as an object lesson in roadmaking to the county and township road authorities.

WHAT IS BEING DONE BY OTHER STATES.

"A few days ago the governor of New Hampshire was in Minneapolis and in an interview said that little rock ribbed state—hardly as large as some of our Minnesota counties—would expend this year $1,000,000 in building three trunk line highways across the state. The state of Washington levies a 1-mill state road tax annually and is getting splendid results. The movement for better public highways is nationwide. Shall our own North Star state keep up with the procession or lag behind?

"With reference to the 1-mill tax, all that can be done at the next session of the legislature is to enact an amendment to the constitution and submit the same to the voters at the regular election in 1912. But in the meantime the legislature of 1911 can levy a one-fourth of 1 mill state road tax, and that is five times more than is levied at present. The legislature can also make a liberal direct appropriation to extend the scope and usefulness of the state highway appropriation. The commission has accomplished a great deal with the scant means at its disposal. The annual appropriation for the state highway commission is less than $9,000, I believe. The state expends annually for the protection of its snipe and suckers—for the benefit of the few—$6,000 or thereabouts. We have all sorts of costly boards and bureaus. Our food, drink, baking powders, kerosene oil and boilers are inspected regularly, almost daily, at the expense of the state, but the most important bureau or commission of all, the highway commission, is begrudgingly given a beggarly pittance of less than $9,000.

"This convention ought to recommend an appropriation of at least $50,000 annually for the state highway commission. Instead of one engineer and a deputy who have not the time at their disposal to visit each county in the state once a year, there ought to be twenty-five or thirty competent engineers and road builders constantly in the field from the 1st of April to the 1st of November each year to superintend the work for which the state has appropriated part of the means, also to instruct the township road authorities in the science of road making."

SOW CORN FOR FORAGE

Dean Shepperd of North Dakota Agricultural College Issues a Timely Bulletin.

With the failure of the hay crop this year farmers are being urged to cast about for some means of providing forage for the coming winter season, and in a special press bulletin issued by Dean J. H. Shepperd of the North Dakota Agricultural college, the question is quite thoroughly taken up.

"The hay crop for 1910 is very short," said Dean Shepperd, "and stock men now have before them the question of providing provender for next season. Fortunately a dry season is usually followed by a rainy late season, which gives a chance for the late grown forage crops to make a great growth.

"There is considerable land summer fallowed each year and all such land that has been plowed can now be seeded to corn or millet and produce a good supply of rough feed for carrying the stock through the winter.

"In the season of 1900 I planted corn on a field of ten acres which I had left for fallowing and which I had harrowed some time before, and I received a yield of over four tons of dry fodder to the acre. I used common feed corn, planting it with a drill in rows wide enough apart to be cultivated by a corn harrow, and thick in the row, about a grain of corn in every two or three inches.

"This field was planted on July 7 and because of the work that had been done on the land, it was in splendid condition. There was plenty of moisture following and the result was good and all that could be expected.

"Corn and millet are hot weather plants and will come on rapidly in mid-summer, if they have an ample supply of rain. I believe it is this year's solution of the forage situation."

GOOD SEED INSTITUTES.

Lecturers Will Visit as Many Towns as Possible.

Next winter the Farmers' Institutes division of the Minnesota department of agriculture will hold good seed institutes in as many towns in the state as their force of lecturers is able to visit and wherever the business men are willing to co-operate in the work. The object of these institutes is to furnish information and instruction regarding the production and selection of good seed. The Experiment Station, having originated and developed a variety of corn that matures in Northern Minnesota and produces good yields, also valuable varieties of grain, leads to the belief that the knowledge obtained in the developing of these varieties should be given to the farmers throughout the state so that they may be able to breed their own seed and properly select it. The principles involved are as applicable in one part of the state as in another.

MORE FIGURES THAT DON'T FIT

Thief River News Tries to Give Voters Another Bum Steer.

The County Division Dopster is so Awfully Clever.

The fellow who writes the county division dope for the Thief River papers has been doing some investigating. That fellow is a star performer in the Sherlock Holmes business. He finds upon investigation, very careful investigation, that the year after Red Lake county was organized the rate of taxation was lower than it is at the present time.

Wonderful discovery!

In an argument that is as convincing as a high school commencement oration, it is then reasoned that Pennington county ought to be sliced off from Red Lake as Red Lake was sliced off from Polk—because the rate of taxation was low in Red Lake county the first year of its existence.

It is a matter of local history that when Red Lake county was organized rigid economy was practiced: Only such appropriations of public money as were absolutely necessary for present needs were made. But it may not have been practical economy, for bridges must be built, roads constructed and various appropriations or expenses of local government must be made eventually.

The people of Thief River Falls could in case Pennington county is created, refrain from spending Pennington's money for a year or two and in that manner keep the rate of taxes low for a short time, they could do that if they should want to.

But a little later the people of the county would be paying taxes just the same, and some taxes, too.

That brilliant dopster should be rewarded with the appointment to the chair of logic in some second class correspondence school.

It is to laugh.

WORTH CONSIDERING

Suggestions to Prevent Losses of Live Stock by Lightning.

A prominent firm, manufacturers of lightning rods, writes under date of May 27th, 1909, that a perfect lightning arrester on a wire fence is obtained by putting a galvanized wire about six feet long into the ground and into moist earth and below the bottom of a fence post, connecting it with three wires on the fence. The connection can be made with the fence wires by wrapping it once or twice around each of three wires and then extending it into the moist earth.

Another prominent firm writes as follows: Wire fences are not in metallic connection with the earth and cannot well receive and discharge the stored electricity, and animals standing by such fence become the means of connecting the fence to earth, electrically, as posts are poorer conductors than animals, but if a ground wire is put on every fifth post no animals will be killed, as the wire is a better conductor than the animal. To put on this wire you can use a wagon box rod to punch a hole two feet deep, stapling the wire to the post so it touches the fence wires. This wire may stick an inch or two above the post. You can protect a pasture of 160 acres for 75 cents if you throw in one-half day of your time to do it.

THE RED RIVER POWER COMPANY

Representatives of the Company Here This Week to Inspect Plant.

Improvements to be Made but Plans are Still in the Making.

The Red Lake Falls electric plant is now in possession of the new owners. The Red River Power company, recent purchasers from the Red Lake Falls Electric Light company, more recently sold to H. M. Byllesby & Company, a large Chicago concern, as reported in the Gazette two weeks ago. The company also purchased the Grand Forks electric and gas plants and the Louisville property. It is understood that the new owners will conduct the business as the Red River Power company, the name under which the Murphy interests operated.

Thomas Roycraft, the company's manager at Grand Forks, and who is also to have general supervision of the local plant, and B. E. Lynch of H. M. Byllesby & Company were here this week to inspect the company's property.

They told the Gazette that the installation of all day service and extensive improvements are planned, but the plans are still in the making and a definite statement of what the company plans to do cannot be made until the engineers have completed their work.

Bids Wanted.

The board of supervisors of the town of Lake Pleasant will meet on the ground, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. Monday, July 11, to let the contract for the construction of a ditch on the quarter section line between sections 22 and 23. Ditch is to be 3700 feet long. Contract to be let to the lowest bidder. Right reserved to reject any or all bids.

G. A. R. STATE CAMP

WORLD MOVEMENT FOR DISARMAMENT HOLDS ATTENTION OF MEN WHO TASTED WAR.

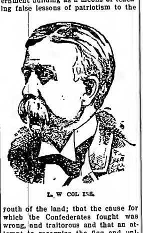
L. W. COLLINS OPENS MEETING

Ovation Is Accorded Prof. Maria Sanford When She Sounds the Call—Hundreds of Defenders of the Union Meet.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Resolutions introducing the Minnesota delegates to the National encampment of the G. A. R., to urge legislation prohibiting the placing statues or paintings of Robert E. Lee or any member of the Confederacy in any buildings or grounds owned or controlled by the federal government were introduced at the forty-fourth annual encampment, department of Minnesota G. A. R. Canfield post No. 8 brought these resolutions before the encampment.

Hardly had they been read before a dozen delegates were on their feet demanding to be heard. State Commander Collins abruptly cut off all argument for the time by referring them to the committee on resolutions.

The resolution characterized the attempt to place Lee's statue in a government building as a means of teaching false lessons of patriotism to the youth of the land; that the cause for which the Confederates fought was wrong, and traitorous and that an attempt to recognize the flag and uniform of the Confederacy in this manner was an insult to the flag and patriotic Americans.



L. W. COLLINS.

The delegates to the national convention were instructed by resolution to favor changing of the name, "United States avenue," at Gettysburg to "Hunt avenue," in recognition of the commander of the artillery at that battle.

Stand to Salute Flag.

Three raps from the gavel of State Commander Loren W. Collins brought the delegates scurrying into their seats. Prayer was said, and then Color Bearer W. H. Deline marched from the entrance to the platform, flag staff in holster, and flag drooping. As he reached the steps leading to the platform, every one present stood, brought his hand to salute, and remained in that position until the colors were placed on the platform.

Commander Collins then made a brief opening address, and was followed by other officers, who read reports. Comrade Levi Longfellow made an address to the flag; Miss Zadie McDonald gave a short recitation, and Miss Helen McDonald sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

Immediately after the convention was called to order at 2 p. m., Prof. Maria Sanford, who delivered an address advocating universal peace on Memorial day, took the platform.

"The proposition I make is that the Grand Army of the Republic ask the Confederate veterans to unite with them and commission Theodore Roosevelt to act as their agent in devising a plan for disarmament and obtaining for it the approval and acceptance of the nations," she said.

"General Sherman said 'War is hell,' and I know he was right," said Benjamin Franklin Curtis, commander of Chase Post No. 22.

Talking not of the victories of war, but of a still greater victory of peace; not of the splendid battalions that marched under Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, but of plans for universal disarmament, more than 500 veterans of the Department of Minnesota G. A. R. met in their forty-fourth annual encampment at the Princess theater, Fourth street, near Central avenue at 10 a. m. today. The morning was devoted to the registration of delegates, the salute of the flag, and routine reports from the state officers. At the afternoon session Prof. Maria Sanford made the principal address, urging the veterans to carry the universal peace propaganda to a successful conclusion.

Loving Cup for Carpenter.

Washington, D. C. — Frederick W. Carpenter, until recently secretary to President Taft and now United States Minister to Morocco, has returned from a visit to his home in Minnesota. He will spend a couple of weeks here conferring with the state department regarding his duties and in closing up his private affairs. He will sail from New York July 5 for Tangier. When Mr. Carpenter visited the White house he was surrounded by the clerks and messengers who presented to him a silver loving cup.

BAD FIRE IN PARK RAPIDS.

Firms Lose Heavily In $19,000 Blaze—Whole Town Threatened.

Park Rapids. — The entire city was threatened by a devastating fire that caused a loss around $19,000 and was extinguished only by the most heroic efforts on the part of the fire fighters.

The blaze originated in the rear of the Park Rapids Drug company's store, and many business places fell prey to the flames.

NEW HOSPITAL DELAYED.

Ruling Causes Cancelation of Contract For Inebriate Institution.

St. Paul. — The new state inebriate hospital provided for by the legislature of 1907, for which a contract was let, will not be erected until the next legislature corrects the law which is declared faulty by Attorney General George T. Simpson. As a result of his ruling the state board of control canceled the contract made with John Lauritzen, of Fergus Falls, for the erection of the building at a cost of $180,000.

The hospital is to be at Willmar and will be supported by a 2 per cent tax on all saloon licenses. This brings in about $16,000 annually. There is, with the appropriation and income, $98,000 in the fund at present.

Lauritzen's attorney conferred with the attorney general concerning the contract. The attorney general says the law does not give the board of control the direct power to erect the building. Further he says the board cannot let the contract until the money is in hand. The board had decided to erect the building and make payments as the money came in.

The ruling does not do away with the institution, but stops proceedings for the present. The board of control and the attorney general will ask the next legislature to correct the law and give the board the power to build and anticipate the payments from the licenses.

The state anti-pass law does not prevent city officials from accepting circus tickets and passes of this character, the matter being called to public attention here through a letter written by Mayor D. M. Brown to the members of the council.

At the next regular meeting of the city council an ordinance will be passed making it unlawful for the agent of any circus, menagerie, side show, wild west show, Indian congress, theater, baseball game, picture show, nickelodeon, merry-go-round, hurdy-gurdy, slot machine, ring-the-cane, hit-the-nigger's-head, or any other exhibition or game whatsoever, to give, directly or indirectly, to any mayor, acting mayor, alderman or city official of any kind, whether elective or appointive, any free pass or ticket of admission.

BRAVES IN PEACE JUBILEE.

Chippewas In Paint and Feathers Celebrate Town's Founding.

White Earth, Minn., June 16.—White Earth celebrated the forty-third anniversary of its settlement by the Minnesota Chippewas.

The town is arrayed in picturesque splendor with a large number of visiting Sioux and native Chippewas gorgeously painted, befeathered and arrayed in all the glory of barbarous splendor as in former days of the warpath and life in the wigwam.

Five hundred Sioux and Chippewa braves took part in the interesting ceremony of burying the hatchet and smoking the calumet.

Peace making by white and native orators, Indians games, races and native dances, baseball and a sham battle constituted the day's program. Bowery dancing and fireworks were the feature of the entertainment. Perfect order prevails.

GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION HOLDS ANNUAL CONVENTION IN FARGO.

HOLD 3 DAY'S SESSION

Mayor Lovell and President Worst Extend Hearty Welcome to Delegates—Putnam's Band in Attendance.

Fargo, June 22.—The third annual convention of the North Dakota Good Roads association was called to order at the A. C. armory this morning at 10 o'clock by Pres. A. I. Hunter of Grand Forks. He then introduced Pres. J. H. Worst of the A. C. as chairman of the convention.

The Putnam band gave several street concerts in the morning and then took the special cars to the college where in the armory the convention will assemble for the two days. The band gave a most pleasing concert prior to the opening of the session.

Dr. R. C. Adams of the First Presbyterian church offered the invocation, asking that the Almighty would shed his blessing on the gathering and that it might be productive of a great deal of good.

The first speaker introduced was Mayor V. R. Lovell. Among other things the mayor said:

"The city of Fargo is always ready to welcome any convention that has for its object the betterment of the conditions of the people in general. It is needless to say that Fargo extends a warm welcome to the people of this convention because they are working for a great end, for good roads will benefit the people of the entire state."

In introducing President Hunter, who delivered the response to Mayor Lovell's welcome, President Worst said that two years ago the Good Roads association was formed at Larimore and that one its greatest enthusiasts was A. I. Hunter of Grand Forks, who had been its first and second president, and he spoke in words of praise of Mr. Hunter's work.

After this speech the convention adjourned and assembled at 1:30 when George W. Cooley, state engineer of Minnesota, delivered his address on The Construction and Maintenance of a Primary System of Highways. Mr. Cooley used a stereopticon and showed some very interesting views.

After Mr. Cooley's address S. R. Cox of Arcola, Ia., talked on The Method of Making Good Roads, which was followed by a general discussion.

ENDORSES TAFT.

Minnesota Republicans Name Ticket and Commend President.

St. Paul, Minn., June 22.—Endorsing the "wise," conciliatory administration of President Taft, but laying on the table, by an overwhelming vote, a resolution reaffirming "our unalterable support of the policies promulgated by Theodore Roosevelt," the Minnesota state republican convention yesterday nominated a full state ticket. A. O. Eberhart was nominated for governor by acclamation, the other nominations being:

Lieutenant Governor—S. Y. Gordon, Browns Valley.

Secretary of State—Julius A. Schmahl, Redwood Falls.

State Auditor—S. J. Iverson, Rushford.

Attorney General—Geo. T. Simpson, Winona.

State Treasurer—Walter J. Smith, Eveleth.

Clerk of Supreme Court—J. A. Caswell, Anoka.

Associate Justice Supreme Court—E. A. Jaggard, St. Paul; P. E. Brown, Luverne; C. L. Brown, Morris; D. F. Simpson, Minneapolis.

Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner—C. H. Staples, St. Paul.

Senator Moses E. Clapp was unanimously nominated to succeed himself as United States senator.

The insurgent element led by T. Halbert, was overwhelmingly defeated in their efforts to secure favorable action on a resolution denouncing the Payne-Aldrich bill as a "repudiation of the pledges of the republican party to the American people."

HOWLEY ENDORSED.

Is Again Elected President of Minnesota Federation of Labor.

Fargo, June 22.—In one of the most stirring addresses delivered at the labor convention, Delegate James, one of the conspicuous leaders, this afternoon put the name of George B. Howley in nomination for president, which was the signal for screeches of applause which resounded for several minutes.

Following this the name of John Walquist was placed in nomination. The ballot for president was the first taken. While the count was being made, vice presidents were elected.

Following is a list of officers as elected:

President—George B. Howley, Minneapolis.

Vice Presidents—1st district, N. A. Kruger, Winona; 2nd district, left to Mankato Trades and Labor assembly; 3rd district, Wm. Schilling, Red Wing; Fargo district, Chas. A. Fraser, Fargo.

Secretary—W. E. McEwen.

Brand Socialists Heretics.

St. Louis, June 22.—Charges of political heresy against the St. Louis branch of the socialist party of America are said to have been sustained at a three days' trial before a special board of inquiry, and as a result the charter of the local body is in danger of revocation. The indictment, as the investigators term it, grows out of the [illegible] socialists [illegible] Jeptha D. How, erstwhile republican boss, at the last municipal election, by which How was enabled to defeat former Excise Commissioner Thomas E. Mulvihill for membership on the board.

Germany Has Airship Line.

Dusseldorf, Germany, June 22.—The first regular airship passenger service was started today when Count Zeppelin's great craft, Deutschland, carrying twenty passengers, successfully made the first scheduled trip from Fredrichshafen to this city, a distance of 300 miles, in nine hours. The weather was perfect and the motors worked faultlessly. The average time made for the complete course was approximately thirty-three miles an hour, but between Friedrichshafen and Stuttgart, 124 miles was covered at the average rate of about forty-one miles an hour.

EAST SHOULD NOT DICTATE

SENATOR BORAH PLEADS FOR SANE CONSERVATION.

Asks Why East Should Have Free Use of Water Power and Resources and West Be Denied.

Washington, June 21.—"What we want is a sane, practical conservation policy, under reasonable regulation, permitting the development of our natural resources in accordance with the natural laws of progress and industrial growth," declared Senator Borah in addressing the senate yesterday during consideration of conservation legislation.

Mr. Borah spoke as the champion of the west. "It would be a magnificent scheme, indeed," he exclaimed, "to compel the whole great west to hold its vast resources in idleness, deprive its people of their enjoyment and use and compel them to pay tribute to those resources of which you have taken possession here in the east and developed at your own free will."

Contending that it was a violation of every principle of the constitution to withhold power sites from the use of the western states, Mr. Borah inquired: "If Illinois or Massachusetts receives thousands or even millions of dollars as a revenue for their water power and Idaho receives nothing, but, on the other hand, pays millions into the federal treasury, is there equality among the states?" He said that the contention that natural resources in a state belonged to all the people in the United States was all right in theory but that in practice it was utterly untrue.

"Our power sites do not in any sense of the term belong to the people of New England or New York," continued the senator. "They are to be utilized by those who make themselves citizens of the state and join with others in trying to build up a commonwealth." He argued that it never had been the theory of the government that these resources should be utilized as a revenue producing proposition but that they were for the benefit of all the people. "But," he said, "the people must come within the state in order to avail themselves of the use and benefits."

Three Hundred Poisoned.

Vienna, June 21.—Poisoning of the waters of a spring near Trau, in Dalmatia, is responsible for the death of three religious processionists, the probable fatal illness of 200 others and the serious condition of at least another hundred. The hospitals at Trau are today crowded with victims of the poisoning outrages.

During a religious parade yesterday in the Trau diocese the procession passed a famous alkaline and sulphur spring. The day was hot and the processionists broke ranks and rushed to the spring. In the disorder one of the attendants at the spring was trampled and killed.

The thirsty paraders drank of the waters and three died within a few hours. Others became violently ill and the religious observance was abandoned, the priests turning their attention toward caring for the stricken men, women and children.

Fifty of the processionists were placed under arrest today, charged with the murder of the attendant. No clue to the poisoning has been found.

Heat Is Continued.

Bismarck, N. D., June 21.—After a night during which the thermometer at the government weather station did not go below 79 and with the temperature up to 94 at 11 o'clock this morning, the people of the western part of the state are due to experience another day as hot as yesterday, if not hotter.

The wind is not blowing today as it did yesterday. There were indications last evening of rain in this vicinity, but the clouds parted and passed over. There have been no reports of rain in any part of the state received here for the past forty-eight hours. The crops, with the exception of flax, are suffering greatly and every day without rain is doing immense damage.

Electric Storm in New York.

New York, June 21.—A severe electrical storm swept the upper part of Manhattan Island and the Bronx Borough today, lightning striking several buildings and doing extensive damage. Several men were shocked into unconsciousness when an electric bolt struck a newspaper branch office on One Hundred and Forty-ninth street. Early indications were that today would prove the hottest so far.

Reno Gets Fight.

Reno, June 21.—Tex Rickard definitely announced shortly after noon today that Reno had been selected for the Jeffries-Johnson fight. The preparations for the arena were begun immediately.

Ogden, Utah, June 21.—Governor Dickinson, of Nevada, who is in Ogden today, declared that he would not interfere with the Jeffries-Johnson fight.

Injured in Fire.

St. Paul, June 22.—Three men were injured during a fire today, which completely destroyed the five-story building owned and occupied by the Andrew Schoch Grocery Co. at the corner of Broadway and east Seventh street.

N. D. Appointment.

Washington, D. C., June 21.—Frank R. Simmons was late today appointed rural carrier at Drayton, vice O. E. Othtott.

Taft to Fight.

Washington, June 21.—Abandoning his trip to New Haven to see his son graduate from Yale and announcing that he would stay in Washington "all summer" if need be, President Taft today began his first fight with the United States senate. The postal savings bill is the issue between the White House and the northern wing of the capitol. The president has announced that the senate must adopt the house bill. Several insurgents and some of the regular republicans are strongly opposed to the house bill and rumors of a filibuster against the measure filled the air.

Fast Train Derailed.

Cincinnati, O., June 21.—One employee was slightly injured when passenger train No. 34, on the Louisville & Evansville railroad was derailed today at Catawba, Pendleton county, Kentucky, fifteen miles south of Cincinnati. Reports received at headquarters of the road in this city states that all the cars that left the track remained upright.

The train is a fast passenger between Nashville and Cincinnati. It was en route to this city with a good complement of passengers when the accident happened. But for a shakeup none of them was injured.

NOW IN SESSION

MINNESOTA FEDERATION OF LABOR HOLD ANNUAL MEETING AT FARGO.

WELCOMED BY MAYOR

And Commissioner of Labor Gilbreath —Largest Labor Convention in the History of the Northwest.

Fargo June 20.—With 214 accredited delegates from all parts of Minnesota where labor unionism is known, the twenty-eighth annual convention of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor opened this morning at Pirie's hall. Never has any city in the northwest been host to a larger or more enthusiastic convention of laborers, and never has a heartier welcome been extended to the men who toil, than was given the visitors this morning.

In many respects the present convention is looked upon with considerable significance, coming at a time when capital and labor legislation occupies the attention in every legislative hall in the country.

The main business before the convention this morning was acting on the reports of the credential committees, which filed minority and majority opinions concerning the right of the convention to seat delegates from the label leagues. The majority held that such action was contrary to the laws of the American Federation. The minority report carried and sixteen lady delegates were seated with full power to ballot.

In opening the convention Charles A. Fraser, president of the Fargo Trades and Labor assembly made a few very fitting remarks. The satisfactory showing that has been made in this city was reviewed by the speaker who declared that it was gratifying not only to local union advocates but to the great movement as well. In conclusion he stated that everything would be done to fulfill the pledges of the Red Wing delegation which succeeded in bringing the convention to this city.

Rev. Chas. Ryan Adams of the First Presbyterian church was called upon to invoke the divine blessing.

On behalf of the city of Fargo Mayor Verner R. Lovell welcomed the delegates to Fargo. In introducing this executive he was referred to by Chairman Fraser as "Mayor of the biggest little city in the world," which brought forth hearty hand clapping.

Following the hearty welcome of Mayor Lovell, W. C. Gilbreath, commissioner of agriculture and labor of North Dakota, was introduced by Chairman C. A. Fraser and was greeted with hearty applause, several times being interrupted by storms of approval.

N. D. Boy Was Murdered.

Lakota, N. D., June 20.—Finding evidence that his son, Daniel Lynch, 22 years old, was murdered and then robbed, his body afterwards being thrown into the bay at Seattle and found twenty-four hours later, John J. Lynch of this city offered a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension of the criminals.

When young Lynch's body was found it was supposed to be a case of accidental drowning, but when a thorough investigation was made a clot of blood on the brain, with every indication of his having been struck by some blunt instrument, together with rifled pockets, told the story.

His body was brought to Lakota and buried. He had left here only a few weeks before his death.

Public Buildings for State.

Washington, June 20.—The Omnibus bill which passed the house late Saturday carried the following appropriations for North Dakota all secured through bills introduced and worked for by Congressman Hanna.

Mandan, site and building, $55,000; Williston, site and building, $145,000; sites at Dickinson, Jamestown and Valley City at $10,000 each.

President Will Insist.

Washington, June 20.—Encouraged by the success that has attended his legislative programme up to this time, President Taft decided today to make an issue of the passage by congress before the adjournment of the present session, of the bill providing for the publicity of campaign contributions in all campaigns affecting federal offices.

Statehood Bill Up to Taft.

Washington, June 20.—Shortly after noon today the vice president affixed his signature to the statehood bill. This is the last step in the progress of the legislation before the measure goes to the president for his approval. The bill will probably reach the white house during the afternoon.

Wants Lorimer Investigated.

Washington, June 20.—Senator Borah today offered an amendment to the senate resolution directing an investigation into the charges of bribery in connection with the election of Senator Lorimer of Illinois to require the investigation to be prosecuted immediately. The proposed amendment was rejected.

N. D. Postal Change.

Washington, June 20.—Elmer E. Williams was today appointed rural carrier at Berg, vice J. I. Berg resigned.

MAY SETTLE QUESTION.

World's Missionary Conference Considers Situation in Congo.

Edinburgh, Scotland, June 20.—The World Missionary conference considered today with other matters, those governmental, diplomatic and civil questions that would affect missions. This subject was introduced through the presentation of the report of the Commission on The Relation of Missions to Governments. Lord Balfour of Burleigh is chairman of this commission and it is expected to make a decided pronouncement upon the Belgian Congo question.

Lake Front Claimants.

Chicago, June 20.—Attorneys representing the Pottawatomie Indians are pressing their claims to rights on Chicago's lake front, worth millions of dollars. The made land, extending into Lake Michigan along Chicago's water front, has constituted a local problem of vital interest for many months. Shipping interests claim the land, as does also the city of Chicago. Now, with a third claimant in the field, the situation becomes even more complex.

One plan which has been suggested for its settlement is that it be left to Chief of Engineers, U. S. A., Col. William H. Bixby.

The Old Time Celebration

THE old-time celebration is the kind I like the best;
The girls, they looked their sweetest, all in fluffy muslin dressed;
And the marshal of the day,
Mounted on a prancing bay,
Rode about a-shouting orders, and a-clearing of the way.
Into town the folks came pouring,
While the anvil shots were roaring,
With the bird of freedom soaring
All the day.

Oh, the old-time celebration always meant a big parade;
Thirteen floats of lovely maidens, all in starry flags arrayed,
And the Goddess, Lib-er-tee,
Waved the emblem of the free,
Sitting on her throne of beauty, unconcerned as she could be.
And the "horribles" came after,
Clad in rags and causing laughter,
And nobody acted dafter
Then than me.

The old-time celebration meant a picnic in the grove—
Oh, the patriotic frenzies that the "noted speakers" wove!
Why, if England with her men
Had swooped down upon us then,
We who "licked her twice already" would have "licked" her once again!
For we tweaked the lion's tail
Till we seemed to hear his wail
[illegible] over hill and dale,
Field and glen.

On the old-time celebration there would always fall a shower,
Splashing on the red umbrellas, dripping from the leafy bower;
And the women, helter skelter,
Seized their skirts and ran for shelter,
While the air was cooled and freshened, which before had made us swelter.
[illegible] the bunting's dripping red
[illegible] made was shed,
And [illegible] many a lady's head,
There to welter.

But the old-time celebration, which we celebrate in story,
[illegible] the day was ended, ended in a blaze of glory;
With the pinwheels flashing, whizzing;
And the rockets crashing, sizzing;
With the [illegible] booming, roaring;
And the fireballs booming, soaring,
[illegible] that broke in air,
[illegible] starlight everywhere;
[illegible] the balloons,
[illegible] of stars and moons;
[illegible] piece "Washington"
[illegible] that the day was done—
[illegible] each glowing spark
[illegible] traveled through the dark.

Declaring Her Independence

FROM the time she was five years old Gloria West had been imbued with patriotic feeling and a reverence for the constitution of her country.

Her father had been [illegible] and her grandfather before [illegible] when she was so little as to [illegible] to get up into a chair without being lifted, she had to sit solemnly by the side of her sisters and [illegible] and listen to tales of heroism told by her father.

On every Fourth of July, as regularly as that date rolled around, Gloria and all the members of her family had been forced to sit patiently and reverently in a circle about the old [illegible] while their father read, [illegible] as he had believed— [illegible] word of the declaration of Independence.

No firecracker, no torpedo, no celebration of any sort took place in the [illegible] until after this patriotic [illegible] had been done. And then the [illegible] was drawn high on its pole [illegible] the various members of the [illegible] were allowed to celebrate in [illegible].

Gloria was nineteen now, and [illegible] her father had long since [illegible] to the resting place of [illegible] the old custom of [illegible] the Declaration on the morning of every Fourth of July still prevailed in the family.

And there were many candidates [illegible] place at Gloria's side. The [illegible] men in the pretty western [illegible] gladly have joined the [illegible] even though it meant absolute [illegible] to the will of the beautiful Gloria.

"I [illegible] be married and submit [illegible] of a mere masculine person," [illegible] to her sister one evening when the latter young woman [illegible] to go to make a dis[illegible] duty call for her husband.

"And what would you do?" asked [illegible], indulgently.

"I'd assert my independence and—"

"And have war instead of peace in [illegible] family," interrupted the wiser [illegible].

"Not at all," protested Gloria laughing. "We're going to have a constitution in our family," she added with [illegible] stress on the progressive pro[illegible]. "And he shall abide by it."

"He?" asked her sister in surprise. "Then have you decided which one it shall be?"

Gloria was noncommittal. "At [illegible], if I have, he doesn't know it," [illegible] said. "It is poor policy to dis[illegible] the maneuvers of war, you [illegible]."

"You're bound to have war at all [illegible]," was her sister's parting comment.

[illegible] a fancy, Gloria had asked [illegible] of her most constant admirers to [illegible] of the Declaration at the [illegible] on the morning of her [illegible] Fourth of July.

"I shall declare my own independence that day," she said to John Hammon, "and every one of you boys shall sign it. Won't it be fun?—for [illegible] added roguishly.

"And if I draw up a constitution to insure a perfect union, Gloria?" the young man asked, half in jest, half in earnest.

Even Gloria's quick wits failed her for a moment. There were so many ways to take that.

"Yes," she said with a gleam of daring in her eyes, as she looked squarely at him, "draw up a constitution and we'll have it put before the whole house."

In the merry jest of the morning when Gloria had laughingly presented to her professed admirers a document wherein she had set forth her acts of independence, each had felt an underlying strain of seriousness and each wanted to talk with her. Jokingly they had signed it, thereby making themselves slaves to her whims henceforth, then, and forever—all but John Hammon.

Gloria Turned and Saw Him.

Even in view of its being the veriest jest, he refused, laughingly though it was, to add his name to the list under Gloria's perpendicular scrawl. Gloria had been accordingly piqued, and though she smiled and danced and made merry, still she wondered why he had refused so trifling a fancy on her part.

At last they were all gone and Gloria was standing on the threshold listening to their footsteps die away on the old brick walk. Presently she heard one pair of steps coming back. Someone had forgotten something.

"Gloria," said the deep voice of John Hammon, "just one moment before you go."

Gloria turned and saw him in the moonlight. "Yes," she acquiesced in such a strange little voice that she hardly recognized it.

"I—that is—I have drawn up the constitution," he said, his hand on his pocket.

"But you didn't sign the declaration," Gloria reminded him, a little pout on her lips.

"I'll sign anything if you say this is all right—read it," he broke off suddenly, thrusting a folded paper into her hand. "Look at it and tell me if you think it will insure us a perfect union, dear."

And in the moonlight Gloria unfolded the paper, to find lying tied within its folds a ring. She did not speak.

"Dear, give me your hand and let me draw up our constitution," he said. "Will you?"

She did; and it fitted so well—was so fitting, as Gloria put it some long minutes afterward—that she decided to accept it.

Improvement in the Dairy Herd lies in better breeding, in better housing and in better feed in greater quantities. Corn fodder, clover and roots must succeed slough hay in winter, and old, weedy pastures must be broken up and sown to clover, blue grass and timothy for summer feeding. Systematic care, and feeding with only the substances which may be grown on every farm in Minnesota, is the practice at University Farm, St. Anthony Park, and is what gives the results reported from the Experiment station.

Weighing and Testing Milk.—This is the only sure way to determine the difference in value between the good and inferior cow. Weighing and testing daily is only a business proposition. It is the only safe way of determining what price to ask for a cow in selling her, or of what to pay for her when buying. No intelligent farmer will sell a cow for thirty dollars that will make him a net profit of $40 or $50 a year. Neither will he keep a cow that doesn't pay him a profit if he knows it.

The Document That Made Americans Freemen

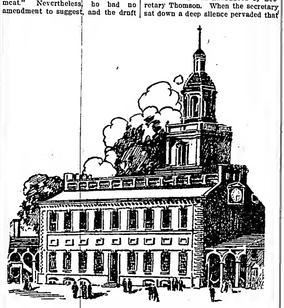
CONGRESS in 1776 had put into the hands of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson the drafting of the Declaration of Independence, writes Fullerton L. Waldo in the Philadelphia Ledger. The two collaborators had a clear idea of the articles of which the Declaration was to consist, for there had been prolonged discussions in committee, of which careful notes were taken. The little sub-committee of two men met and conferred together, and Jefferson asked Adams to take the written memoranda to his lodgings and there prepare the draft.

But Adams, self-effacingly, insisted that the laborious honor should fall to his colleague.

"You are a Virginian," said Adams, "and I am a Massachusetts man. You are a southerner and I am from the north; I have been so obnoxious for my early and constant zeal in promoting the measure that any draft of mine would undergo a more severe scrutiny and criticism in congress than one of your composition. And finally—and that would be reason enough if there were no other—I have a great opinion of the elegance of your pen and none at all of my own."

Whereupon, bowing deeply and with protestations of mutual regard, the patriots went their several ways, Jefferson with the manuscript under his arm. And in a day or two they met again and "conn'd the paper over."

"I was delighted with its high tone," Adams wrote in 1822 to Timothy Pickering. But to the part containing the denunciation of King George he took exception. "I thought the expression too passionate and too much like scolding for so grave and solemn a document." Nevertheless, he had no amendment to suggest, and the draft of the declaration was put before the committee of five just as Jefferson had prepared it.



Famous Old Independence Hall.

The desk upon which the declaration was drafted is in the library of the state department at Washington. It was exhibited at Buffalo in the Pan-American exposition in 1901.

The final debate in congress, in the committee of the whole, upon the adoption of the Declaration of Independence began at nine o'clock on Monday, July 1. On that day Pennsylvania, seven of whose delegates were present, voted against adoption. The vote of Delaware, having two delegates present, was divided.

Thereupon McKean of Delaware, who had voted affirmatively, wrote a frantic letter to the absent Delaware delegate, Caesar Rodney, imploring him to come and cast his vote, and thus turn the scale for Delaware, for it was highly probable that if Delaware supported the declaration Pennsylvania would follow suit.

Rodney at the time was 80 miles away, at Dover, at one or the other of his farms, Byfield and Poplar Grove. He suffered tortures from the cancer, which, starting on his nose, had spread all over one side of his face, so that he had to wear a green silk shield to hide the disfigurement; it was of this chronic affliction that he died. A contemporary chronicle describes him as "an animated skeleton—indeed, all spirit, without corporeal integument."

McKean's messenger left Philadelphia late in the afternoon of July 1. It was necessary to get Rodney back to Independence hall by July 4, the day appointed for taking the vote upon the adoption of the declaration. All night, all day he rode at top speed; and Rodney is supposed to have started on the return journey in the evening of the second.

That ride of Rodney's deserves to go down in history alongside of Paul Revere's and Philip Sheridan's. In default of missing detail the imagination must provide the picture of the tall gaunt spectre of a man, half-masked and riding like a demon, urging his steed onward through the night with whip and spur, along a road abounding in pitfalls, with black miles separating one warm, yellow cabin light from the next. What was he thinking of as he rode onward? Not of the pain of the cancer, slowly eating away his countenance and sapping his vitality; not of the risk he ran, a solitary horseman, of being waylaid and robbed or murdered upon the lonely journey. He heeded not the hunger and the sleeplessness; he was thinking only of the fact that his vote would turn the day for Delaware; Delaware, though a little state, might influence Pennsylvania, and so the vote of the colonies would be unanimous for a declaration that would immortalize the men who made and signed it, and enfranchise the people of the 13 colonies and their descendants.

Next day, Thursday, July 4, as the members were assembling at the state house door, a rider, booted and spurred and covered with the dust of night-and-day travel, dismounted in their midst, and when, a little later, Caesar Rodney rose in his place, still breathing hard, and said, "I vote for independence," the result was that the vote of Delaware was cast in favor of the declaration, Pennsylvania, by three of her five delegates present, supported Delaware's notion, and thus by the ride of Rodney the unanimous vote of the colonies (with the solitary and temporary exception of New York) was that day secured for the Magna Charta of our American liberties.

"It was two o'clock in the afternoon," Lossing tells us, "when the final decision was announced by Secretary Thomson. When the secretary sat down a deep silence pervaded that august assembly. Thousands of anxious citizens had gathered in the streets. From the hour when congress convened in the morning the old bellman had been in the steeple. He placed a boy at the door below to give him notice when the announcement should be made. As hour succeeded hour, the grayheard shook his head, and said, 'They will never do it! They will never do it!' Suddenly a loud shout came up from below, and there stood the blue-eyed boy, clapping his hands and shouting 'Ring! ring!' Grasping the iron tongue of the old bell, backward and forward he hurled it a hundred times, its loud voice proclaiming 'Liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof.' The excited multitude in the streets responded with loud acclamations, and with cannon peals, bonfires and illuminations the patriots held glorious carnival that night in the quiet city of Penn."

Union and Liberty.

Flag of the heroes who
Borne through their battlefields' thunder and flame,
Blazoned in song and illumined in story,
Wave o'er us all who inherit their fame!
Up with our banner

THE GREAT STRUGGLE

The Civil war was the most momentous struggle of history. It operated through fifteen imperial states, over more than 600,000 square miles. Its armies were unparalleled—2,000,000 as brave and intelligent men as ever gathered for mortal strife. Grant alone commanded more soldiers than Napoleon ever saw.

Its leaders were unsurpassed—McClelland, the magnificent; Hancock, the superb; Logan, the dashing; Thomas, the conservative; Meade, the self-reliant; Hooker, the fighter; Sheridan, the relentless; Sherman, the strategist; Farragut, the peerless admiral; Seward, the statesman; Sumner, the philanthropist; Stanton, the man of iron will; Chase, the financier; Greeley, the journalist; Beecher, the preacher; Phillips, the orator; Whittier, the bard, and above all these, the mightiest military chieftain of modern times—the silent man of destiny—U. S. Grant.

HONOR FOR WOMAN DOCTOR

Bertha von Hoosen of Chicago Writes Paper Which Is Read in Medical Congress.

Chicago.—Out of several hundred papers submitted to the international congress, the one of a woman doctor of Chicago, Dr. Bertha von Hoosen, was chosen to be read before the association at its meeting in Budapest. It was one of two written in the English language that were chosen, the other being the production of an eastern doctor of distinction. Just as soon as she was informed of her honor, Dr. von Hoosen hastened abroad, taking her mother, who is more than eighty years old, with her.

Besides this honor, she has been attending clinics in Paris, which are said to have been closed to women until just a few years ago, and she has performed a number of operations.

Dr. Bertha von Hoosen.

She is acknowledged by the men of her profession to be a surgeon of great skill. St. Luke's operating room is the place where she does much of her work, and she has been known to perform five operations in a morning and maintain her steadiness of hand throughout.

In appearance Dr. von Hoosen is not what the professional woman has erstwhile been considered to be. She is small and plump and she has quantities of golden hair. Her face is youthful and her eyes are bright and sympathetic. She dresses with style and taste.

RICH "COP" STILL ON BEAT

Policeman Neely of Pittsburg Has $100 Daily Income, But Holds His Job.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Despite the fact that an oleaginous stream of wealth is flowing into his coffers at the rate of $100 a day, Harry Neely of the Pittsburg police force is content to continue swinging his nightstick and "pounding a beat."

Neely, who is 35 years old and a patrolman attached to the Allegheny police station, had as his heritage a small sandy farm, in Sandy Creek, Pine township, 15 miles from Pittsburg, which until recently was productive of little besides rocks and stumps.

Then an agent of John D. Rockefeller came along and scented oil underlying the bleak acres. Today four "gushers" are pouring forth a united stream of wealth and semi-annually there comes to Patrolman Neely a check drawn on the Standard Oil company and approximating $100 a day as Neely's share of the proceeds.

The field is being further developed and Neely bids fair to become a very rich man. He is investing his money in brewery stock as fast as the checks come in.

Harry Neely.

"Meanwhile," says Neely, "three dollars a day merely for swinging a club and wagging an occasional sleeper still looks good to me."

Saved the Sunday Dinner.

That the present cost of living has caused articles ordinarily of but slight value to assume an unusual degree of importance in the household is aptly illustrated by an incident which occurred at a fire in a neighboring town early Sunday morning.

The first floor of the building in which the fire broke out is occupied by a clothing firm, and the upper stories are rented out as apartments. When the alarm was sounded the dwellers in the apartments, with one exception, hurriedly dressed and left the burning building. The exception who, by the way, was the first to reach the street, appeared with nothing on his back but a pair of pajamas and a refrigerator. A question as to why he had sought to save the refrigerator first elicited the following reply:

"Say, all the provisions for our Sunday dinner are in that icebox, and if we are burned out, God only knows when I will be able to buy another."

Do you blame him?—Pittsburg Gazette.

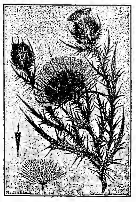
Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

Canada Thistle, How to Exterminate.

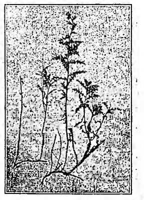
By J. E. Sundberg, Kennedy, Minn., in Minnesota Farmers' Institute Annual.

One of the greatest enemies that the farmers have to contend with is the Canada Thistle. It makes his land look bad, diminishes his chances of selling, and greatly reduces the crop yield. What shall we do to rid ourselves of this awful pest is the cry of every industrious farmer? Many different methods of eradicating the Canadian Thistle have been suggested by farmers and also by experiment station men.

The scientific man tells us to cover the patches with tar paper and thereby smother the plants. This is undoubtedly an absolutely safe method and would be practical if one only had a few small patches. But when your entire farm is overrun, such a method is entirely impractical. Others tell us to sprinkle salt on them. This again is an impractical method for a farmer who has a quarter section or more of land. No, we must look to some other way.



Bull Thistle.



Canada Thistle.

The above cuts represent the Canada thistle and the Bull Thistle so common in pastures, and are published to enable Minnesota farmers to distinguish them.

During the last eight years I have tried different methods and at last I believe I have struck a way of eradication that is practical.

First: I tried plowing shallow in the fall and then plowed again late in the spring and sowed barley. The barley gets ripe before the thistle. Harvesting did not kill all the thistle. But it did kill out the wild oats. Working the land two seasons in succession like that will completely destroy the wild oats, but not very many thistles are killed.

Second: I tried summer following. I endeavored to keep the thistle underground, which is nearly impossible. In 1900, I experimented with 50 acres. This piece was plowed five times and disced six times. The last time it was plowed in the latter part of October. The following spring I cross-seeded it with wheat, using two bushels to the acre. The thistles were annihilated. This method is all right in a dry season, though it is a very expensive one. But, if the season is wet, this course is of no avail, in fact, it will only spread the thistles because each time it is plowed the roots are cut and each root piece will grow. Because, if it is wet you cannot keep it underground and then the thistles get the start anew. No, this way cannot be recommended.

Third: At last I believe I found the practical method. Let the land lay idle for one season. Between the 10th and the 25th of July, the thistles are in bloom and the stocks are hollow. At this time the field should be cut with a mower, then raked and the weeds burned. The field can then lay till about the 1st of August. It should be plowed quite deep any time in August, but before the 25th. After plowing, drag it to start other weeds growing, and, later, drag again and destroy them. This plan I have tried for two years and it has proven an absolute success.

It is indeed a very difficult matter to rid the farms of thistles. You can by the third method rid the piece treated that same year. But then if there are any large farms or speculator's lands lying near, the seeds, millions of them, blow onto your clean fields and in a few years your land is overrun again. If there was a farmer on every 160 acres or 320 it would be an easy matter. Because then they could treat some land according to the first method and some according to the third and in that way completely exterminate the thistles.

Do not plant corn on land that has thistles, because that only cultivates them. Along the ditches and at the side of the roads, one should seed timothy and alsike clover, thereby giving no chance for the thistle to grow and spread.

I have also found that seeding the infested fields to timothy will also rid us of the thistles. The timothy must not be pastured because that tends to till the thistle. If the timothy is mowed just as the thistles are in bloom, for two or three successive years, it will kill them. For a farmer having 160 acres I would recommend the following:

Divide the field into three parts. One part should be treated according to the first method, seeding either barley or early oats. Second part should be treated in accordance with the third method. The third part should be sowed down to timothy and clover. Cut the timothy for hay, for three years, and then break it up the fourth year. It should be broken shallow in the spring, or early summer, after seeding is over. Then it should be backset quite deep between July 25th and August 10th, and then dragged a few times in the fall. By adopting this plan one could get rid of this pest.

Bordeaux Mixture.

The Minnesota Experiment Station submits the following formula for Bordeaux Mixture for potatoes:

Five pounds of bluestone (also known as copper sulphate, or blue vitriol) and five pounds of the best grade of stone lime, to fifty gallons of water. For fruit trees a 4-4-50 formula may be used. The bluestone can be dissolved most readily by hanging it near the top of the water. The lime must be fresh and of the best grade and should slake readily. It should be slaked several hours or more before it is wanted. When ready to apply the Bordeaux mixture, the bluestone solution, containing the five pounds of bluestone, should be poured into the sprayer barrel and diluted to about thirty-five gallons. The milk of lime, containing the original five pounds of stone lime, should then be diluted to about fifteen gallons, and poured into the diluted bluestone solution. The resulting product is the Bordeaux mixture, ready for use. Any poison needed for potato bettles may then be added, thus spraying for blight and the potato bugs at the same time.

If the lime used is of low grade, there is danger of burning of the foliage from the Bordeaux mixture. A good test is to hold the point of a knifeblade in the mixture for a short time. If copper collects on the blade, more lime must be added.

Throughout all this work it must be remembered that high pressure in spraying (not less than seventy-five pounds), thorough application, constant agitation and thorough straining are essentials to success.—A. R. Kohler, of Horticultural Division of Minnesota Department of Agriculture.

Effect of Sulphate Spraying.

To ascertain the effect of spraying with iron sulphate for the destruction of weeds, in Minnesota, a pound and a half of the chemical was used with each gallon of water, on the weeds named below, with the result shown:

Canada thistle, plant above ground partially injured, kept from seeding; ragweed, plants killed; quack grass, leaves discolored, no injury; plantain, leaves blackened and dried, new leaves appeared; sweet clover, large plants sprayed, all leaves killed, new leaves appeared, small plants killed; pigeon grass, no effect; chickweed, twenty per cent killed; fivefinger, severely injured, some killed; wild buckwheat, very little damage; lambsquarters, not affected; Shepherd's-purse, plants killed; curled dock, leaves killed, new leaves appeared; kinghead, small plants killed, leaves on large plants killed, new leaves appeared; sheep sorrel, quite effective; burdock, leaves blackened, no damage; corn cockle, plants somewhat injured; bull thistle, no permanent injury; pigweed, fifty per cent destroyed.

Besides copper sulphate and iron sulphate, other chemical sprays are sometimes used to destroy weeds, such as corrosive sublimate and sodium arsenite. They should be used only under exceptional circumstances and with full understanding of their poisonous nature.—W. L. Oswald, Minnesota Experiment Station.

It is a Loss of Money according to reliable statistics received at the Minnesota Experiment Station for farmers to do business over roads as at present constructed in this state.

Improvement in the Dairy Herd lies in better breeding, in better housing and in better feed in greater quantities. Corn fodder, clover and roots must succeed slough hay in winter, and old, weedy pastures must be broken up and sown to clover, blue grass and timothy for summer feeding. Systematic care, and feeding with only the substances which may be grown on every farm in Minnesota, is the practice at University Farm, St. Anthony Park, and is what gives the results reported from the Experiment station.

Weighing and Testing Milk.—This is the only sure way to determine the difference in value between the good and inferior cow. Weighing and testing daily is only a business proposition. It is the only safe way of determining what price to ask for a cow in selling her, or of what to pay for her when buying. No intelligent farmer will sell a cow for thirty dollars that will make him a net profit of $40 or $50 a year. Neither will he keep a cow that doesn't pay him a profit if he knows it.

S.S.S. CURES OLD BLOOD TROUBLES

Contagious Blood Poison is at the bottom of a great many old blood troubles. The disease may have been contracted years ago and some treatment used that removed the outward symptoms and shut the virus up in the system to slumber in the blood, but it only awaited a favorable opportunity to break out in some form again.

Certain forms of catarrhal troubles, especially where the bones are affected, scrofulous affections, non-healing sores, ulcerated membranes, etc., are due to this specific poison. Perhaps many who are afflicted in this way are ignorant of the fact that the seeds of this mighty poison are still hidden in the blood. Like the deadly serpent, which is dangerous as long as the faintest spark of life is left to enable it to sink its poisonous fangs, this powerful disease will corrupt and defile while the least particle of its insidious virus remains in the blood.

The best time to get rid of Contagious Blood Poison is when the disease is first contracted, and before its virus so penetrates the blood as to cause ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, etc. Then of course the victim is saved much humiliation and suffering; but even after the poison has become established in the system it can be removed and a cure effected if the blood be thoroughly purified with S. S. S.

S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers. It possesses penetrating powers that enable it to go down into the blood, and remove the last trace of blood poison. It cures all blood troubles simply and solely because it removes the cause from the circulation. Not only does S. S. S. cure the Contagious Blood Poison when first contracted, but reaches it in any of its stages, even where the trouble has been inherited. S. S. S. is made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and does not contain the slightest trace of mineral in any form. You can get rid of your old blood trouble if you will take S. S. S. and allow it to purify the blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

A PERFECT CURE.

Some eight years ago I was inoculated with poison by a nurse who infected my babe with blood taint. I was covered with sores and ulcers from head to foot. No language can express my feelings of woe during these long years. I was advised by friends who had seen wonderful cures made by it, to try S.S.S. We got some and I improved from the start, and a complete and perfect cure was the result. S. S. S. is the only blood remedy which reaches desperate cases of old blood troubles.

TERREBONNE.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurent Gagne celebrated their golden wedding Monday, the 4th of July. They were married in 1860 in Quebec and moved afterwards, some thirty years ago, to Terrebonne. A high mass was sung for them by Rev. Fr. Veilleux who congratulated the happy people. One of the pioneer women, Mrs. Perusse and Mr. X. Sauve, were respectively bridesmaid and groomsman. All wish for Mr. and Mrs. Gagne a diamond jubilee.

A pretty new set of pews has been installed in the church which adds greatly to the beauty of it.

Next Tuesday the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Crookston, Mgr. Corbett, will confirm a large class of children, some 350. A solemn high mass will be celebrated at 10 a. m. Many guests are expected.

TOOT YOUR OWN HORN, HE SAYS

Address at Conservation Meeting By Editor of Minneapolis Tribune.

One of the most pertinent addresses of the Northern Minnesota Development Congress was that of Leroy Boughner, city editor of the Minneapolis Tribune. It was, in part, as follows:

"Before this body of delegates there is no need of dwelling upon the need of publicity, for this is an age of advertising, and this convention itself is evidence of your belief in tooting one's horn. Publicity for Northern Minnesota is your object and I have been permitted to offer a word or two that may help you to make that publicity effective. Publicity must be effective, or you will have wasted time and money, and it can't be effective unless it is intelligent.

"It's of no use to have a splendid article for sale if you can't sell it; and it's of no use to try to build up a splendid part of the state and get what is coming to you if you can't make anybody listen to you. The northern part of the state isn't near enough the North to attract by a sort of magnetism; you've got to get out and hustle, not only in the forenoon, but all day; and not only today, but tomorrow, and all next week, and month after month, till you get what you want. You can get it by the intelligent use of publicity—which is nothing more or less than taking people by the back of the neck and making them look at this part of the country whether they want to or not.

"Unintelligent publicity is squatting down upon the farm and expecting that the Lord and the rest of the state will be good to Northern Minnesota. The Lord has been good to Northern Minnesota and he will keep it up, but the people are not so discerning and when you deal with them you can readily believe that Missouri has overlapped all the rest of the country and stops only a few miles south of Crookston. They have got to be shown.

"Intelligent publicity, however, is more than waiting for good things to come; it is going out and taking them, and I am sure that newspaper men, who have spent years—perhaps not many, but at least some years—in the study of what must be done to make a man listen when he doesn't want to can tell how to attain it.

MAKE A FRIEND OF THE HOME EDITOR.

"You have listened to the answer to the question, 'What Must We Do to Be Saved?' Mr. Dowling has his own splendid ideas upon that question, but if I were answering it I'd say: Get acquainted with a reporter. Every man in these counties, when he gets back home, ought to look up the editor of his home paper, if he doesn't know him already, and make a friend of him. The editor will be a friend of yours, if you make an advance, and you will never regret the step. Every commercial organization ought to include all the newspaper men in the district, and I don't say this because I'm a newspaper man, and want recognition, but because these men, who study nothing but the best methods of making people read what they write, can be of assistance to you in making people read your message.

"Newspapers all over the country want interesting news and pictures. Here's an example:

"In two weeks you will install a new bishop here. I suppose every Twin City newspaper man will have to write to Crookston to get photographs of the church or cathedral, the bishop's house, and the bishop himself. Yet every newspaper in three states would be glad to publish a composite picture of that kind, and at an expense of not to exceed $50 Crookston could have the photographs or cuts made and send them to the papers and get this publicity.

"Ten million people, at an expense of half a hundred dollars, could be made to see the importance Crookston has assumed, and newspaper men would watch for these opportunities and help you to take advantage of them.

MANY INCIDENTS FOR FREE ADVERTISING.

"There are enough such incidents to get this part of the state good free advertising at least once a week. The other day there were statements published in the Twin Cities that the recent forest fires had done great good in clearing the land. Now, the original stories of the forest fires were printed the country over and ninety millions of people got the idea from that that Northern Minnesota was simply an unbroken stretch of inhospitable woods. What was done to counteract this feeling? Probably nothing. But a photograph of a stretch of fertile land, cleared by the so called 'destructive' forest fires, could, by a little tact, have found publication in a hundred newspapers, if you sent with it the facts I have just related dressed in readable fashion. That is the secret; make the news of Northern Minnesota readable, and you needn't worry about publicity.

"Another way to obtain intelligent publicity is to boost your part of the state among yourselves all the time. Our hotel reporter must turn in two interviews each day, one praising Minnesota, the other praising Minneapolis. You needn't smile and say 'What's the use of telling your readers what they know already?' Your wife knows she's a good cook and you know it; but doesn't she like to be told it? Of course she does; everybody likes to have his good points praised, and what is true of the individual with regard to his own is true of the mass with regard to property as a whole. If you keep telling people what a fine state they have, what splendid farms, what unexcelled advantages, they will talk about it, and spread the gospel—and they won't do it unless you keep telling them. Have your newspapers talk Northern Minnesota every day, every week, and their readers will follow their lead.

ANOTHER METHOD TO SECURE PUBLICITY.

"You noticed my reference to the hotel reporter. There's another avenue leading to publicity that every man here can follow. Within the year at least a hundred of those who are listening to me will go to the Twin Cities. Let each one, when he strikes the city, look up a newspaper reporter and tell him that the crops are fine in Beltrami county and that the last mortgage was burned the night before. That reporter will hie himself back to the office and write the story and print it and the next morning a hundred thousand people are reading your message. If you can't get ten settlers out of a hundred thousand your message must be wrong.

"Don't make the mistake of telling the reporter too much; give him just an item or two; and don't insist that he write it your particular way. Leave it to him, it's his business to make it readable, and he will if you leave it to him. The percentage of mistakes in a newspaper is small compared to the enormous number of facts.

"And that reminds me: Have any of you seen a mistake in the Twin City papers about Northern Minnesota? I should assume you had. When you did see it what did you do about it? Did you stop to think that newspapers are striving for facts and nothing but the facts, and that they are just as anxious not to make mistakes as you, and that they are just as anxious to correct them as you are—unless you take a club to the editor, and then he won't correct anything. An editor can't be forced to do anything, but he can be coaxed like a girl. You all know about the editor that wrote up the 'battle scarred' veteran, and the printer made it 'battle scared.' The veteran went around next day and made a complaint in a gentlemanly way and the editor immediately corrected it, but the printer made another mistake and set it 'bottle scarred.' Then the veteran took a club to the editor and the editor wouldn't correct a letter. He said he'd rather resign than take chances of making another mistake. He didn't stop running till the veteran got out of breath.

"That story is proof of what I say, that you can always get a correction. And now, the next time that a mistake is made, sit down and write a letter to the editor, pointing out the error. Make it short; don't call any names; assume that the mistake was unintentional, which is true in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases, and I'll guarantee that the correction will be printed. Do this; don't let anybody get away with anything that damages Northern Minnesota."

HE QUALIFIED.

The Soldier Told the Truth and Won the Prize.

During the spring of 1864 a company of Virginia soldiers was encamped near the home of Mrs. Sawyer, a woman noted throughout the neighborhood for her charitable deeds. One day, driving by the camp, she saw a poor, sick soldier lying by the roadside and, stopping her carriage, talked to him for some time, asking about his health and expressing her sympathy. She noticed while doing so that on each hand he had two thumbs.

Upon reaching home she was haunted by the recollection of the poor man, and, although provisions of all kinds were very scarce, she determined to divide with him the few things she had in the house.

After preparing the basket she remembered that she had not asked his name, but, recalling his deformity, wrote on the cover, "For the soldier with two thumbs." Giving it to a trusted negro, with minute directions, she sent him on horseback to the camp.

She was much surprised at his speedy return and asked how he had managed to find the man so soon.

"He was de fust one I see," said Sam. "I was gwine 'long, and a soldier ask me what I got in dat basket, and I tole 'im a chicken and things for de man wid two thumbs, and he say he was de one, and I give 'im de basket."

"Did he have two thumbs on each hand?" she asked.

"Well, he didn't say nothin' 'bout whar he had 'em. He jes' say he got two thumbs."—Youth's Companion.

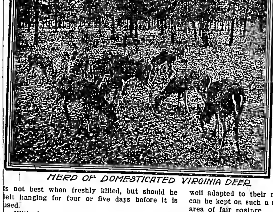
DEER FARMING IN THE UNITED STATES

BY D. E. LANTZ
U. S. BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

That the rising prices of beef and mutton in the United States can be partially overcome by raising deer for venison, is maintained by Dr. C. Hart Merriam, chief of the United States biological survey. According to Dr. Merriam elk meat can be produced cheaper than beef or mutton in many sections of the United States, and with comparatively little effort it is possible to make raising deer for venison as profitable as any other live-stock industry. Everyone who has seen the large numbers of deer browsing on private estates in England as peacefully as cattle and sheep wonders why American enterprise has not long since developed breeding deer for food in this country.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN ELK



HERD OF DOMESTICATED VIRGINIA DEER

SEVERAL species of deer are suited for breeding in enclosures in the United States; the axis deer, the Japanese and Pekin sikas, the red and the fallow deer of Europe, and especially the Rocky Mountain elk, or wapiti, and the Virginia deer. While experiments with the foreign species named offer every promise of success to the owners of American preserves, the elk and Virginia deer are recommended as best adapted for the production of venison in the United States.

The flavor of venison is distinctive, though it suggests mutton rather than beef. In chemical composition it is very similar to beef. A lean venison roast before cooking has been found to contain on an average 76 per cent. of water, 20 per cent. of protein or nitrogenous material and 2 per cent. of fat; a lean beef rump, some 65 to 70 per cent. of water, 20 to 23 per cent. of protein and 5 to 14 per cent. of fat; and a lean leg of mutton, 67 per cent. of water, 19 per cent. of protein and 13 per cent. of fat.

The general popularity of venison is so great and the demand for it so widespread that overproduction is improbable. The other products of the deer—skins and horns—are of considerable importance and in countries where deer are abundant and especially where large herds are kept in semi-domestication, the commerce in both is very extensive.

The wapiti, known generally in America as the elk, is, next to the moose, the largest of our deer. It was once abundant over the greater part of the United States, whence its range extended northward to about latitude 60 degrees in the Peace river region of the interior of Canada. In the United States the limits of its range eastward were the Adirondacks, western New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania; southward it reached the southern Alleghenies, northern Texas, southern New Mexico and Arizona; and westward the Pacific ocean.

At the present time the elk are found only in a few scattered localities outside of the Yellowstone National park and the mountainous country surrounding it, where large herds remain. Smaller herds still occur in Colorado, western Montana, Idaho, eastern Oregon, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia and the coast mountains of Washington, Oregon and northwestern California. A band of the small California valley elk still inhabits the southern part of the San Joaquin valley.

The herds that summer in the Yellowstone National park and in winter spread southward and eastward in Wyoming are said to number about 30,000 head and constitute the only large bands of this noble game animal that are left. Although protected in their summer ranges and partially safeguarded from destruction in winter by the state of Wyoming, there is yet great danger that these herds may perish from lack of food in a succession of severe winters. Partial provision for winter forage has been made within the national park, but the supply is inadequate for the large numbers of animals. Further safeguards are needed to place the Wyoming elk herds beyond the reach of winter starvation.

In addition to the wild herds there is a considerable number of elk in private game preserves and parks, as well as in nearly all the public zoological parks and gardens of this country. The herds in captivity form the nucleus from which, under wise management, some of the former ranges of this animal may restocked and from which a profitable business of growing elk venison for market may be developed. At the present time this species affords a most promising field for ventures in breeding for profit.

The elk is both a browsing and a grazing animal. While it eats grasses freely and has been known to subsist entirely upon pasture, it seems to prefer a mixture of grass and browse.

The elk is extremely polygamous. The adult bulls shed their antlers annually in March or April and new ones attain their full size in about 90 days. The "velvet" adheres until about August. While the horns are growing the bulls usually lead solitary lives; but early in September, when the horns are fully matured, the mating season begins. Fights for supremacy then take place and the victor takes charge of as many cows as he can round up and control.

Although the elk is less prolific than the common deer and some other species that have been bred in parks, it increases fully as rapidly as the common red deer of Europe. Moreover, it makes up for any lack of fecundity by its superior hardiness and ease of management. It has been acclimatized in many parts of the world and shows the same vigor and hardiness wherever it has been transplanted. In Europe it has been successfully crossed with the Altai wapiti and the red deer and in both instances the offspring were superior in size and stamina to the native stock.

The flesh of the elk, although somewhat coarse, is superior in flavor to most venison. That of the bulls is in its best condition about the time the velvet is shed. In October their flesh is in the poorest condition. As the open season for elk is usually in October and November and only bulls are killed, it follows that hunters often obtain the venison when it is poorest. The meat is not best when freshly killed, but should be left hanging for four or five days before it is used.

With few exceptions the early attempts to domesticate elk were made by men who were wealthy enough to disregard all thought of profit in raising them. They were usually placed under the care of servants and the bucks were left uncastrated until they became old and unmanageable. Soon the serious problem of controlling them outweighed the novelty of their possession and one by one the attempts at domestication were abandoned.

A desire to preserve this important game animal has caused a renewal of attempts to breed it in confinement and at present there are small herds under private ownership in many places in the United States. The biological survey has recently obtained much information from owners of herds in regard to their experience in breeding and rearing the animals and also their opinions as to the possibility of making the business of raising them profitable. Of about a dozen successful breeders nearly all are of the opinion that raising elk for market can be made remunerative if present laws as to the sale of the meat are modified.

One especially important fact has been developed by the reports from breeders. It is that the elk readily adapts itself to almost any environment. Even within the narrow confines of the paddocks of the ordinary zoological park the animal does well and increases so that periodically the herds have to be reduced by sales.

The fullest reports that have been received by the department of agriculture from breeders of elk are from George W. Russ of Eureka Springs, Ark.

Mr. Russ has a herd of 34 elk. They have ample range in the Ozarks on rough land covered with hardwood forests and abundant underbrush. The animals improve the forest by clearing out part of the thicket. They feed on buds and leaves to a height of eight feet and any growth under this is liable to be eliminated if the range is unrestricted. If not closely confined elk do not eat the bark from trees nor do they eat evergreens. In clearing out underbrush from thickets they are more useful than goats, since they browse higher. Goats, however, eat closer to the ground, and as the two animals get along well together Mr. Russ recommends the use of both for clearing up brushy land and fitting it for tame grasses.

The increase of elk under domestication is equal to that of cattle. Fully 90 per cent. of the females produce healthy young. An adult male elk weighs from 700 to 1,000 pounds; a female from 600 to 800 pounds. The percentage of dressed meat is greater than with cattle, but, owing to hostile game laws, experience in marketing it is very limited. An offer of 40 cents a pound for dressed meat was received from St. Louis, but the law would not permit its export. Mr. Russ says:

"From the fact that as high as $1.50 a pound has been paid for the meat in New York city and Canada and that the best hotels and restaurants pronounce it the finest of all the meats of mammals, we are of the opinion that if laws were such that domesticated elk meat could be furnished it would be many years before the supply would make the price reasonable compared with other meats. Elk meat can be produced in many sections of this country at less cost per pound than beef, mutton or pork."

Mr. Russ thinks that large areas of rough lands in the United States not now utilized, especially in localities like the Ozarks and the Alleghenies, could be economically used to produce venison for sale and he regards the elk as especially suited for this purpose.

Another feature of Mr. Russ's report is of more than passing interest. He says:

"We find from long experience that cattle, sheep and goats can be grazed in the same lots with elk, providing, however, that the lots or inclosures are not small; the larger the area the better. We know of no more appropriate place to call attention to the great benefit of a few elk in the same pasture with sheep and goats. An elk is the natural enemy of dogs and wolves. We suffered great losses to our flocks until we learned this fact; since then we have had no loss from that cause. A few elk in a thousand-acre pasture will absolutely protect the flocks therein. Our own dogs are so well aware of the danger in our elk park that they cannot be induced to enter it."

Elk thrive best in preserves having a variety of food plants—grasses, bushes and trees. Rough lands, well watered with clear streams and having some forested area, are well adapted to their needs. About as many elk can be kept on such a range as cattle on an equal area of fair pasture. There should be thickets enough to furnish winter browse, but this should be supplemented by a supply of winter forage.

Except when deep snows cover the ground, elk will keep in good condition on ordinary pasture and browse, but a system of management that provides other food regularly will be found more satisfactory. Hay and corn fodder are excellent winter forage, but alfalfa hay has proved to be the best dry food for both elk and deer.

Elk are much less nervous than ordinary deer and less disposed to jump fences. When they escape from an enclosure they usually return of their own accord. If tame, they may be driven like cattle. Ordinarily a five-foot fence of any kind will confine elk.

The cost of stocking an elk preserve is not great. Usually surplus stock from zoological parks or small private preserves may be obtained at low cost, varying with the immediate demand for the animals.

The Virginia or whitetail deer is the common deer of the United States. Including the half dozen geographic races that occur within our borders, it is distributed over most of the country, except Nevada and the major portions of Utah, Arizona, Washington, Oregon and California. It is extinct in Delaware and practically so in a number of states in the middle west. South of our borders a number of closely related species occur.

In view of the wide natural range of the Virginia deer, its adaptability to nearly all sections of the United States cannot be doubted. Testimony as to its hardiness in parks and preserves is not so unanimous as that concerning the elk; but the general experience of breeders is that with suitable range, plenty of good water and reasonable care in winter, raising this deer for stocking preserves or for venison may be made as profitable as any other live-stock industry. Not only do deer thrive on land unsuited for cattle or horses, but, like elk, they may be raised to great advantage in brushy or timbered pastures fully stocked with cattle or horses, as the food of deer rarely includes grass.

Advocates of the Angora goat industry state that within the United States there are 250,000,000 acres of land not suited to tillage or to the pasture of horses, cattle or sheep, which are well adapted to goats. Much of this land is suited also to deer and elk and can be utilized for these animals with less injury to the forest cover than would result from browsing by goats.

Virginia deer have often been bred in parks for pleasure or in large preserves for sport, but the economic possibilities in raising them have received little attention. Recently breeders have recognized the fact that they are profitable under proper management and would be much more so were conditions for marketing live animals and venison more favorable.

The chief obstacle to profitable propagation of deer in the United States is the restrictive character of state laws governing the killing, sale and transportation of game. Many of the states, following precedent, lay down the broad rule that all the game animals in the state, whether resident or migratory, are the property of the state. A few states except game animals that are "under private ownership legally acquired."

The laws concerning the season for killing and the sale of deer are often equally embarrassing to those who would produce venison for profit. The owner of domesticated deer cannot legally kill his animals except in open season.

Instead of hampering breeders by restrictions, as at present, state laws should be so modified as to encourage the raising of deer, elk and other animals as a source of profit to the individual and to the state.

It is believed that with favorable legislation much otherwise waste land in the United States may be utilized for the production of venison so as to yield profitable returns and also that this excellent and nutritious meat, instead of being denied to 99 per cent. of the population of the country may become as common and as cheap in our markets as mutton.

Trees in Their Right Place

One Writer Who Asserts That Conservation Can Be Carried to the Extreme.

Among persons who use more sentiment than reason, or lack knowledge of the facts, it has become a fad to say it is a crime to cut down a tree and that it is always, under any circumstances, an act of great virtue to plant one.

To one who gives thought to the matter, these accepted principles may be reversed, and we can say with all seriousness and truth that there is no town in this country where the judicious use of the ax among trees in some neighborhood or other is not demanded; and, on the other hand, thousands of trees are planted where no tree should be planted.

Each variety of fruit or ornamental tree when it reaches maturity under reasonably favorable conditions has its established size or spread of branches. Among the better shade trees this reaches 40, 50, and even a greater number of feet in diameter. In dense forests we see the trees stretching up after air and sunshine, losing their side branches and becoming a collection of giant telegraph poles with pitiful bunches of green at the top, nothing beautiful about them.

Every tree to be beautiful must have room to expand and develop to its proper proportions, and to retain the side branches with which nature always furnishes them, unless she is thwarted by the bungling hand of the hired man with ax or saw.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

CZAR'S SPIES ALERT

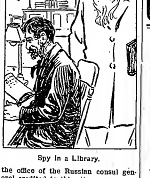
Every Russian in New York Under Espionage.

Emperor's Hirelings Haunt the Libraries and Make Note of What Is Read by Supposed Revolutionists.

New York.—If a Russian Jew dwelling in an East side tenement house spends his evenings in a public library reading the history of his fatherland or poring over books on democracy or socialism, the secret police of the czar of Russia will know about it, sooner or later. The name, age, sex, New York address, and occupation of the library reader will in the course of routine business be inscribed on the official records at St. Petersburg, together with a description of the listed person's physical appearance.

According to Bourtseff and the local leaders of the movement with whom he is working, this city harbors many secret agents of the home government whose business it is to keep the police informed of the revolutionary activities here, and especially to cable information whenever a revolutionist leaves New York for a visit to Russia. His departure is known in St. Petersburg before his ship is half way across the Atlantic, and if he ventures to cross the Russian border some pretext is found for arresting him.

It is optional with each spy in this city what ostensible occupation he shall have. He may push a peddler's cart, or keep a shop, or print books, or have a job in some city department. Anything will do so long as his neighbors do not suspect him and admit him to membership in one or more of the many little organizations of the revolutionists. He attends the meetings of these various "circles," takes part in their debates, often as not is a leader and noted for the earnestness of his denunciation of the czar. His real business is to report to the chief of the spies in New York, who in turn communicates with the Russian police and makes a call at the office of the Russian consul general credited to this city.



Spy in a Library.

This chief agent is supposed to be Alexander M. Evenlenko, who calls himself a publisher, and who declares that he is loyal to the same cause that his accusers are working for. But it is said that Evenlenko makes too many calls at the consulate, and he is specifically charged with informing St. Petersburg of the coming of Matushenko. Matushenko was one of the conspirators who brought about the mutiny on the Russian warship Potemkin. He escaped to this country, where he was harbored by Evenlenko, and then returned to Russia upon the latter's advice. He was captured at the border and hanged three days later.

For every drop of blood spilled in this revolutionary work there are oceans of printer's ink involved. Bomb throwing is infrequent, but pamphlets attacking the czar and printed in New York and Paris are smuggled over the Russian border every day by the carload. So, in the opinion of the secret police, the first step toward disloyalty to the government is reading about it. That is why the spies in New York have their instructions to watch the libraries. One of these agents is an old man with a long white beard. He is a great reader himself. He spends most of his time in the branch public libraries on the East side.

But he never forgets that he is on duty, and looks away from his fiction pages from time to time to see who is reading the heavier books of philosophy and history and political economy. If he sees that some other reader is there regularly he will walk behind him to get a glimpse of his book. If it is of the sort of literature supposed to breed discontent with monarchies in the mind of the reader, the old spy will find some way of learning that reader's name and address. He will report to the chief agent, who will give the name of the suspect to the spy assigned to the student's particular neighborhood. The second spy will learn what organization, if any, the library patron belongs to, and then attend a meeting to learn how much of what has been absorbed from the books is poured out in speeches denouncing the czar. Then, after this investigation, if the watched man or woman is considered at all dangerous by the agent, the name is forwarded to Russia.

A DETERMINED WOMAN
Finally Found a Food That Cured Her.

"When I first read of the remarkable effects of Grape-Nuts food, I determined to secure some," says a woman in Salisbury, Mo. "At that time there was none kept in this town, but my husband ordered some from a Chicago traveler.

"I had been greatly afflicted with sudden attacks of cramps, nausea, and vomiting. Tried all sorts of remedies and physicians, but obtained only temporary relief. As soon as I began to use the new food the cramps disappeared and have never returned.

"My old attacks of sick stomach were a little slower to yield, but by continuing the food, that trouble has disappeared entirely. I am today perfectly well, can eat anything and everything I wish, without paying the penalty that I used to. We would not keep house without Grape-Nuts.

"My husband was so delighted with the benefits I received that he has been recommending Grape-Nuts to his customers and has built up a very large trade on the food. He sells them by the case to many of the leading physicians of the county, who recommend Grape-Nuts very generally. There is some satisfaction in using a really scientifically prepared food."

THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE

SYNOPSIS.

Miss Innes, spinster and guardian of Gertrude and Halsey, established summer headquarters at Sunnyside. Amidst numerous difficulties the servants deserted. As Miss Innes locked up for the night, she was startled by a dark figure on the veranda. She passed a terrible night, which was filled with unseemly noises. In the morning Miss Innes found a strange link cuff button in a clothes hamper. Gertrude and Halsey arrived with Jack Bailey. The house was awakened by a revolver shot. A strange man was found shot to death in the hall. It proved to be the body of Arnold Armstrong, whose banker father owned the country house. Miss Innes found Halsey's revolver on the lawn. He and Jack Bailey had disappeared. The link cuff button mysteriously disappeared. Detective Jamieson and the coroner arrived. Gertrude revealed that she was engaged to Jack Bailey, with whom she had talked in the billiard room a few moments before the murder. Jamieson told Miss Innes that she was hiding evidence from him. He imprisoned an intruder in an empty room. The prisoner escaped down a laundry chute. It developed that the intruder was probably a woman.

CHAPTER VII.—Continued.

"Liddy," I called, "go through the house at once and see who is missing, or if any one is. We'll have to clear this thing at once. Mr. Jamieson, if you will watch here I will go to the lodge and find Warner. Thomas would be of no use. Together you may be able to force the door."

"A good idea," he assented. "But—there are windows, of course, and there is nothing to prevent whoever is in there from getting out that way."

"Then lock the door at the top of the basement stairs," I suggested, "and patrol the house from the outside."

We agreed to this, and I had a feeling that the mystery of Sunnyside was about to be solved. I ran down the steps and along the drive. Just at the corner I ran full tilt into somebody who seemed to be as much alarmed as I was. It was not until I had recoiled a step or two that I recognized Gertrude, and she me.

"Good gracious, Aunt Ray," she exclaimed, "what is the matter?"

"There's somebody locked in the laundry," I panted. "That is—unless—you didn't see any one crossing the lawn or skulking around the house, did you?"

"I think we have mystery on the brain," Gertrude said wearily. "No, I haven't seen any one, except old Thomas, who looked for all the world as if he had been ransacking the pantry. What have you locked in the laundry?"

"I can't wait to explain," I replied. "I must get Warner from the lodge. If you came out for air, you'd better put on your overshoes." And then I noticed that Gertrude was limping—not much, but sufficiently to make her progress very slow, and seemingly painful.

"You have hurt yourself," I said sharply.

"I fell over the carriage block," she explained. "I thought perhaps I might see Halsey coming home. He—he ought to be here."

I hastened to the lodge.

"Where is Warner?" I asked.

"I—I think he's in bed, ma'am."

"Get him up," I said, "and for goodness sake open the door, Thomas. I'll wait for Warner."

"It's kind o' close in here, ma'am," he said, obeying gingerly, and disclosing a cool and comfortable-looking interior. "Perhaps you'd keer to set on the porch an' rest you'self."

It was so evident that Thomas did not want me inside that I went in.

"Tell Warner he is needed in a hurry," I repeated, and turned into the little sitting room. I could hear Thomas going up the stairs, could hear him rouse Warner, and the steps of the chauffeur as he hurriedly dressed. But my attention was busy with the room below.

On the center table, open, was a sealskin traveling bag. It was filled with gold-topped bottles and brushes, and it breathed opulence, luxury, femininity from every inch of surface. How did it get there? I was still asking myself the question when Warner came running down the stairs and into the room. He was completely but somewhat incongruously dressed, and his open, boyish face looked abashed. He was a country boy, absolutely frank and reliable, of fair education and intelligence—one of the small army of American youths who turn a natural aptitude for mechanics into the special field of the automobile, and earn good salaries in a congenial occupation.

"What is it, Miss Innes?" he asked anxiously.

"There is some one locked in the laundry," I replied. "Mr. Jamieson wants you to help him break the lock. Warner, whose bag is this?"

He was in the doorway by this time, and he pretended not to hear.

"Warner," I called, "come back here. Whose bag is this?"

He stopped then, but he did not turn around.

"It's—it belongs to Thomas," he said, and fled up the drive.

To Thomas! A London bag with mirrors and cosmetic jars of which Thomas could not even have guessed the use! However, I put the bag in the back of my mind, which was fast becoming stored with anomalous and apparently irreconcilable facts, and followed Warner to the house.

Liddy had come back to the kitchen; the door to the basement stairs was double-barred, and had a table pushed against it; and beside her on the table was most of the kitchen paraphernalia.

"Did you see if there was any one missing in the house?" I asked, ignoring the array of sauce pans, rolling pins and the poker of the range.

"Rosie is missing," Liddy said with unction. She had objected to Rosie, the parlor maid, from the start. "Mrs. Watson went into her room, and found she had gone without her hat. People that trust themselves a dozen miles from the city, in strange houses, with servants they don't know, needn't be surprised if they wake up some morning and find their throats cut."

After which carefully veiled sarcasm Liddy relapsed into gloom. Warner came in then with a handful of small tools, and Mr. Jamieson went with him to the basement. Oddly enough, I was not alarmed. With all my heart I wished for Halsey, but I was not frightened. At the door he was to force Warner put down his tools and looked at it. Then he turned the handle. Without the slightest difficulty the door opened, revealing the blackness of the drying room beyond!

Mr. Jamieson gave an exclamation of disgust. "Gone!" he said. "Confound such careless work! I might have known."

It was true enough. We got the lights on finally and looked all through the three rooms that constituted this wing of the basement. Everything was quiet and empty. An explanation of how the fugitive had escaped injury was found in a heaped-up basket of clothes under the chute. The basket had been overturned, but that was all. Mr. Jamieson examined the windows; one was unlocked, and offered an easy escape. The window or the door? Which way had the fugitive escaped? The door seemed most probable, and I hoped it had been so. I could not have borne, just then, to think that it was my poor Gertrude we had been hounding through the darkness, and yet—I had met Gertrude not far from that very window.

I went upstairs at last, tired and depressed. Mrs. Watson and Liddy were making tea in the kitchen. In certain walks of life the tea pot is the refuge in times of stress, trouble or sickness; they give tea to the dying and they put it in the baby's nursing bottle. Mrs. Watson was fixing a tray to be sent in to me, and when I asked her about Rosie she confirmed her absence.

"But Before We Go On, I Want to Say This."

"She's not here," she said; "but I would not think much of that, Miss Innes. Rosie is a pretty young girl, and perhaps she has a sweetheart. It will be a good thing if she has. The maids stay much better when they have something like that to hold them here."

Gertrude had gone back to her room, and while I was drinking my cup of hot tea, Mr. Jamieson came in.

"We might take up the conversation where we left off an hour and a half ago," he said. "But before we go on, I want to say this: The person who escaped from the laundry was a woman with a foot of moderate size and well arched. She wore nothing but a stocking on her right foot, and, in spite of the unlocked door, she escaped by the window."

And again I thought of Gertrude's sprained ankle. Was it the right or the left?

CHAPTER VIII.

The Other Half of the Link.

"Miss Innes," the detective began, "what is your opinion of the figure you saw on the east veranda the night you and your maid were in the house alone?"

"It was a woman," I said positively.

"And yet your maid affirms with equal positiveness that it was a man."

"Nonsense," I broke in. "Liddy had her eyes shut—she always shuts them when she's frightened."

"And you never thought then that the intruder who came later that night might be a woman—the woman in fact, whom you saw on the veranda?"

"I had reasons for thinking it was a man," I said, remembering the pearl cuff-link.

"Now we are getting down to business. What were your reasons for thinking that?"

I hesitated.

"If you have any reason for believing that your midnight guest was Mr. Armstrong, other than his visit here the next night, you ought to tell me, Miss Innes. We can take nothing for granted. If, for instance, the intruder who dropped the bar and scratched the staircase—you see, I know about that—if this visitor was a woman, why should not the same woman have come back the following night, met Mr. Armstrong on the circular staircase, and in alarm shot him?"

"It was a man," I reiterated. And then, because I could think of no other reason for my statement, I told him about the pearl cuff-link. He was intensely interested.

"Will you give me the link," he said when I finished, "or, at least, let me see it? I consider it a most important clew."

"Won't the description do?"

"Not as well as the original."

"Well, I'm very sorry," I said, as calmly as I could, "I—the thing is lost. It—it must have fallen out of a box on my dressing table."

Whatever he thought of my explanation, and I knew he doubted it, he made no sign. He asked me to describe the link accurately, and I did so, while he glanced at a list he took from his pocket.

"One set monogram cuff-links," he read, "one set plain pearl links, one set cuff-links, woman's head set with diamonds and emeralds. There is no mention of such a link as you describe, and yet, if your theory is right, Mr. Armstrong must have taken back in his cuffs one complete cuff-link, and a half, perhaps, of the other."

The idea was new to me. If it had not been the murdered man who had entered the house that night, who had it been?

"There are a number of strange things connected with this case," the detective went on. "Miss Gertrude Innes testified that she heard some one fumbling with the lock, that the door opened, and that almost immediately the shot was fired. Now, Miss Innes, here is the strange part of that. Mr. Armstrong had no key with him. There was no key in the lock, or on the floor. In other words, the evidence points absolutely to this: Mr. Armstrong was admitted to the house from within."

"It is impossible," I broke in. "Mr. Jamieson, do you know what your words imply? Do you know that you are practically accusing Gertrude Innes of admitting that man?"

"Not quite that," he said with his friendly smile. "In fact, Miss Innes, I am quite certain she did not. But as long as I learn only parts of the truth, from both you and her, what can I do? I know you picked up something in the flower bed; you refuse to tell me what it was. I know Miss Gertrude went back to the billiard room to get something, she refuses to say what. You suspect what happened to the cuff-link, but you won't tell me. So far, all I am sure of is this: I do not believe Arnold Armstrong was the midnight visitor who so alarmed you by dropping—shall we say, a golf-stick? And I believe that when he did come he was admitted by some one in the house. Who knows—it may have been—Liddy!"

I stirred my tea angrily.

"I have always heard," I said dryly, "that undertakers' assistants are jovial young men. A man's sense of humor seems to be in inverse proportion to the gravity of his profession."

"A man's sense of humor is a barbarous and a cruel thing, Miss Innes," he admitted. "It is to the feminine as the hug of a bear is to the scratch of—well, anything with claws. Is that you, Thomas? Come in."

Thomas Johnson stood in the doorway. He looked alarmed and apprehensive, and suddenly I remembered the sealskin dressing bag in the lodge. Thomas came just inside the door and stood with his head drooping, his eyes, under their shaggy gray brows, fixed on Mr. Jamieson.

"Thomas," said the detective, not unkindly, "I sent for you to tell us what you told Sam Bohannon at the club, the day before Mr. Arnold was found here, dead. Let me see. You came here Friday night to see Miss Innes, didn't you? And came to work here Saturday morning?"

For some unexplained reason Thomas looked relieved.

"Yas, sah," he said. "You see it were like this: When Mistah Armstrong and the fam'ly went away, Mis' Watson an' me, we was lef' in charge till the place was rented. Mis' Watson, she've bin here a good while, an' she warn' skeery. So she slep' in the house. I'd bin havin' tokens—I tol' Mis' Innes some of 'em—an' I slep' in the lodge. Then one day Mis' Watson, she came to me an' she sez, sez she: 'Thomas, you'll hev to sleep up in the big house. I'm too nervous to do it any more.' But I jes' reckon to myself that ef it's too skeery fer her, it's too skeery fer me. We had it, then, sho' nuff, and it ended up with Mis' Watson stayin' in the lodge nights an' me lookin' fer work at da club."

"Did Mrs. Watson say that anything had happened to alarm her?"

"No, sah. She was jes' natchally skeered. Well, that was all, far's I know, until the night I come over to see Mis' Innes. I come across the valley, along the path from the club house, and I goes home that way. Down in the creek bottom I almost run into a man. He wuz standin' with his back to me, an' he was workin' with one of these yere electric light things that fit in yer pocket. He was havin' trouble—one minute it'd flash out, an' the nex' it'd be gone. I hed a view of 'is white dress shirt an' tie, as I passed. I didn't see his face. But I know it warn't Mr. Arnold. It was a taller man than Mr. Arnold. Besides that, Mr. Arnold was playin' cards when I got to the club house, same's he'd been doin' all day."

"And the next morning you came back along the path," pursued Mr. Jamieson relentlessly.

"The nex' mornin' I come back along the path an' down where I dun see the man night befoh, I picked up this here." The old man held out a tiny object and Mr. Jamieson took it. Then he held it on his extended palm for me to see. It was the other half of the pearl cuff-link!

But Mr. Jamieson was not quite through questioning him.

"And so you showed it to Sam, at the club, and asked him if he knew any one who owned such a link, and Sam said—what?"

"Wal, Sam, he' lowed he'd seen such a pair of cuff-buttons in a shirt belongin' to Mr. Bailey—Mr. Jack Bailey, sah."

"I'll keep this link, Thomas, for a while," the detective said. "That's all I wanted to know. Good-night."

As Thomas shuffled out, Mr. Jamieson watched me sharply.

"You see, Miss Innes," he said, "Mr. Bailey insists on mixing himself with this thing. If Mr. Bailey came here that Friday night expecting to meet Arnold Armstrong, and missed him—if, as I say, he had done this, might he not, seeing him enter the following night, have struck him down, as he had intended before?"

"But the motive?" I gasped.

"There could be motive proved, I think. Arnold Armstrong and John Bailey have been enemies since the latter, a cashier of the Traders' bank, brought Arnold almost into the clutches of the law. Also, you forget that both men have been paying attention to Miss Gertrude. Bailey's flight looks bad, too."

"And you think Halsey helped him to escape?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Women in Postal Service

The distinction of first appointing a woman postmaster does not belong to America, nor is the employment of women in the postal service a new idea. As early as 1548 a woman postmaster was appointed to look after the mails of Braine le Comte, an important town of France. In the trying times of the Thirty Years' War the principal office in the postal service of Europe was held by a woman, Alexandrine de Rue. From 1628 to 1646 she was in charge of the mails of the German empire, the Netherlands, Burgundy and Lorraine. She was known as a master general of the mails. In America, Elizabeth Harvey was the first to hold a place in the postal department. She had charge of the letters in Portsmouth, N. H., in the beginning of the seventeenth century. A half century afterward Lydia Hill was placed in charge of the post office in Salem, Mass.

Chinese Thanks for Rain.

The following quaint Chinese imperial decree was recently issued from the palace in Pekin: "Owing to the scarcity of rain Prince Kung and others have been detailed to pray at the Takaotien on our behalf by dedicating incense, and also Prince Tsai Hsun and others to the Shih yin-kung and other temples to pray by dedicating incense and now plenty of rain has come for which we feel thankful. Therefore we detail Prince Tsai Hsun to the Takaotien on the 7th July on our behalf dedicate incense, and we detail Prince Puhung to the Shaochengmiao, Duke Tsai Tse to the Hsunjeumiao, Tsai Futo the Yihomiao on the same day to dedicate incense and to perform ritual service to return thanks for the rain with desires for further rainfall to console the peasants."—Shanghai Mercury.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

A USEFUL QUALITY.

Big Profits from Cheap Lands in Eastern Colorado

Eastern Colorado—the wonderful cattle country, great because of great crops of nutritious grasses and fine water. Better results are obtained in the feed-lots of Eastern Colorado than from any other district.

The best and strongest horses are raised solely on native grasses without prepared food, and bring fancy prices for cavalry purposes and general use.

Conditions are ideal for dairying or sheep raising. Mild winters—plenty of sunshine—abundant pure water, rich grasses, alfalfa, cow peas, kaffir corn, broom corn, milo maize and cane through all the year.

Hogs thrive—no cholera or other diseases that attack swine in lower altitudes. Hogs raised on alfalfa, fattened on corn raised on the same farm, cost $4 per head (including first cost of parent stock) and sell readily at top prices.

The climate of Eastern Colorado is the healthiest in the world for men and beast. Good churches, good schools and splendid markets.

Improvements that are not only pleasing to the eye, but are substantial and that are of lasting benefit and satisfaction are those that have been made upon the streets and sidewalks of the city the past few weeks. New cement walks about the St. Joseph's church and school grounds and along a number of the residence and business streets and the grading and graveling of some of the streets is work that is being well done and that is an improvement that is much appreciated by the people of the city. One of the property owners who objected mildly to the construction of cement walks because of the expense, is so well pleased that he says that under like circumstances he'd do what he objected to doing this time even if it cost much more. There is not another improvement that would add more to the appearance of the city than the construction of cement walks and the work is practical, for though the first cost seems large, it is cheaper "in the end." The work is permanent and the expense of repair as well as that of rebuilding is practically eliminated. It would be a fine thing for Red Lake Falls if many more blocks of cement walks were to be built this season and next year.

A Stomach on a Holiday.

A Chicago wine merchant went on a yachting trip with a judge from the same city. They were out together for two weeks and had a good time. When they returned the agent was much upset to find himself summoned on a jury, but cheered up when he discovered the judge on the bench was his late yachting companion. He hurried to the court and pleaded business pressure as a reason for an excuse for him.

"What is your business?" the judge inquired of him coldly.

"I represent a wine in Chicago."

"Selling it or drinking it?"

"Well, drinking it largely."

"Step into the box, sir. A ten days' rest will do you good."

The wine agent served.

CROP CONDITIONS MUCH IMPROVED

A Fine Rain Comes and the Farmers are all Happy Again.

A Conservative Estimate is that County Will Have at Least Half a Crop.

It rained!

And the rain that it rained was such a fine rain!

There was a steady downpour from three until seven o'clock Monday morning. The rain extended over much of the Red River valley and there was greater precipitation some places than here. In the northern part of the county there were good rains a few days earlier and crop prospects are looking up some, whatever that means or something like that.

Before the rains came the farmers were getting pretty discouraged because of the prolonged "dry spell," but most everybody is happy now. There are a few places on the ridges where there won't be much to harvest, but in other places there are actually some fine stands of grain. For example, between this city and Terrebonne crops are looking fine.

Asked for opinions regarding the crop prospects for Red Lake county, people who have been traveling thru the county since the rain and visitors from various parts of the county who have been in the city expressed the opinion that the county over "better than half a crop" will be harvested. There seemed to be no difference of opinion on that point.

The hay crop will be light, but corn and potatoes are coming along fine and a lot of fodder corn has been planted to help with the seed problem. Prices are sure to be good and there is little occasion for any one feeling blue, with a few exceptions of those who have high sandy land. In fact the farmers of Red Lake county are fortunate indeed by comparison with people in many parts of the country.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Billion Dollars' Worth of Products Shows Magnitude Output.

According to the last year-book of the Department of Agriculture, there are 21,720,000 milch cows in the United States and these are worth $702,645,000.00. The magnitude of the industry can perhaps be best understood when it is considered that these cows produce yearly about $1,000,000,000.00 worth of diary products.

There is no other branch of diversified agriculture so important to the progress of a community. The fertility of the soil can best be maintained by the liberal use of barnyard manure and the dairy herd not only makes this possible but diarying is also more remunerative than other branches of farming when properly carried on.

Dairying has made wonderful progress since the advent of the modern creamery and the consumer of butter has not only been benifited by being furnished a more wholesome and palatable article of food, but the wife in the farm home is relieved of the drudgery incident to making butter on the farm. Where formerly the cream was ripened and churned into butter under conditions not conductive to fine quality in the finished product and in the majority of cases by unskilled hands, now the most of the milk or cream is delivered to a modern creamery where the conditions are suited to the purpose of making butter, and the result has been a wonderful improvement in the quality of our dairy products. As the quality has improved consumption has increased and the progress of dairying has been remarkable during the past decade.

The perpetuity of the country's greatness depends upon increasing the production of farm products from year to year, a result which not only furnishes our people with food but maintains the prosperity of our farming communities. Increase in production can only come through improved methods of agriculture and soil improvement. When it is considered that the dairy cow is the foundation for soil improvement and farming prosperity, her importance is better understood, and interest in her should not be confined to her owner. She is an important factor in the development and prosperity of our country.

There will be services at the Presbyterian church at the usual hours Sunday morning and evening.

Divorce Was Granted.

Before Judge Watts in chambers last evening Mrs. Magnhild Lee was granted an absolute divorce from her husband, Lars Lee. The parties have been married for twenty-one years and have made their home northwest of Thief River Falls where they owned 160 acres of land. They had two children, a girl of 19, who is now married, and a boy of 16. The grounds on which the divorce was asked and granted were habitual drunkenness and cruelty. By stipulation the land and property was divided. Attorney Guy Halvorson of Thief River Falls represented Mrs. Lee while Chas. E. Boughton of Red Lake Falls appeared for the husband.—Crookston Press.

SOME FIGURES THAT DON'T LIE!

An Argument Against County Division That Is Unanswerable

A Contribution from a Man Who Knows What He's Talking About.

The Gazette has received the following letter which is an interesting contribution to the literature of the county division campaign:

Brooks, Minn., July 11, 1910.

Editor Gazette:—

For the benefit of the county divisionists of Thief River Falls and the people of Red Lake county in general, I wish to give them an example of the difference in taxes between little Scott county, which they alluded to in their papers, and Red Lake county. I lived in Scott county for fifty years, owned 156 acres of land in one of the full townships of that county, 60 acres of which was under plow. 10 acres were assessed as swamp and the remainder was meadow and timber pasture. On the buildings I could not get over $1000 insurance, and for the last ten years I have paid $40 to $42 per year real estate taxes. There is no ditch tax, or court house tax, as the court house has been built forty years and would be a disgrace to the Fiji Islands, but they have got to do with it, for the taxes are already too high. There are not any large streams to be bridged in the county and not any more poor to be taken care of than in any other county of its size, and its affairs are run as economically as possible.

Now I own 250 acres in Red Lake county which I am told is the best in the county. There ar 100 acres under the plow. I have $1000 insurance on my buildings and have paid this year's taxes which were $33.10.

Now I think this example ought to prove to any fair minded man that small counties are an expensive luxury especially where there is so much idle land.

Hoping your readers will think it over seriously before election, I remain,

Yours truly,
THOS. F. CONNORS.

Neither Pennington nor reduced Red Lake county, in case county division should carry, would have more than half as many people as Scott county and not half as much property to be assessed, and yet either county would have greater expense,—county buildings to be paid for, roads and bridges to be built and general expenses as large at least as those in Scott county. Read Mr. Connors' letter again and then try to figure what would be the taxes on a 160 acre farm in Pennington or reduced Red Lake county.

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL

A Fine New Building is Being Erected at the Crookston School.

"The Ladies Dormitory and Auditorium at the Crookston School of Agriculture are being rapidly pushed towards completion and everything is in favor of their being finished and equipped ready for the fall term. The Ladies Dormitory has thirty-seven students' rooms and will accomodate from seventy-five to one hundred girls.

The building is to have parlor, bedrooms, toilets and bathrooms fitted up with the most modern conveniences and everything will be done to make the school life of the students pleasant as well as profitable. The Auditorium is to have a large Assembly Room 41x61 ft. with a balcony at the rear and a large stage at the front. This room will seat about 400 persons. This building also contains the Superintendent's offices, the Library, and Reading Room 24x34ft. Shower Baths, Toilets and Locker Rooms, and a Gymnasium 41x61ft. where the students may get pysical training under a competant director.

The fall term opens October 8, 1910. Board and room will be $15.00 per month. Those wishing copies of the School Bulletin for 1910 and 1911 may receive them by addressing, Supt. Crookston School of Agriculture, Crookston, Minn."

It Would Be So Easy.

Some one has suggested that a ball game between the married men and the single men of the city would be a lot of fun. That is doubtful of course because it would be such a snap for the married men that the game could not be very interesting. But if a collection were to be taken up after the game and the proceeds devoted to a fund for the erection of a bachelor's home, all charitably minded people would become interested and the little chewing match could be made a financial success.

However, it is probable that the bachelors don't dare.

Like Our Band.

In its write-up of the fair held at Fertile, the Fertile Journal has the folowing to say of the Red Lake Falls band:

The Red Lake Falls band was there with the music all the time. They were always ready for every occasion. They are a gentlemanly lot of players and are considered one of the best bands in this part of the state. The management have no reason to feel otherwise but well pleased with music given them and if Fertile has no band next year no other music will be considered but the Red Lake Falls band.

ED SMITH IS THE MAN ON THE JOB

Minneapolis Politician Chosen to Run the Republican State Campaign.

The Governor and His Secretary Dodging Pinchot-Ballinger Controversy.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, July 12.—It is difficult to understand why Republicans who are satisfied to see Mr. Eberhart nominated for governor should set up such a roar because he has selected Ed. Smith to be chairman of the Republican State Central committee and his personal representative. And if they have kept in touch with what is going on they would hardly have failed to know that ever since he has been governor Senator Smith has been Mr. Eberhart's constant advisor. It was Senator Smith who, in selecting a private secretary for the governor, chose a man who could be relied upon not to butt in and at the same time keep him informed as to what was going on in the executive office. It was Senator Smith who directed the governor's pre-convention campaign. It was the interests that Senator Smith represents who took the initiative in rounding up delegates, promptly sat down on it whenever incipient opposition raised a snarling front and smoothed the way for a harmonious convention.

Eberhart's Inspiration.

Moreover when Mr. Eberhart was lieutenant governor it was to Senator Smith to whom he looked to organize the senate. Mr. Smith was given carte blanche not only to name the committees on which he wished to serve but also to select portfolios for his friends. Because Senator Smith took the trouble to organize the senate Mr. Eberhart's ways were made pleasant for him. They made a great team. Left to itself there is no telling what the senate might have done. There was a nasty sprinkling of insurgency in it. Men were there who wanted to make trouble for the railways, for the brewers, for the steel trust, and for corporations generally. Ed. went around quickly and fixed things before the men possessed with vagaries knew where they were at, he had the legislative plums apportioned, the patronage distributed, and everything was working like clockwork.

Smith's Recommdations.

The objection made is that Senator Smith has a record. What of it? His friends are the Governor's friends. Supposing Mr. Smith heretofore has done business with them. It surely does not constitute a disdvantage on the eve of a campaign to have a man in charge who knows the ropes and who is next the people who can finance a political campaign without feeling it. Governor Eberhart has been through two campaigns and doubtless knows where the shoe pinches. There is no Cole this year to foot the committee's bills. It is most humiliating and unpleasant to have to go around hat in hand as had to be done two years ago begging for small contributions and then to be harrassed afterwards by unpatient creditors. Why should the governor not take care to have a man at the head of his committee who would relieve him of so unpleasant a prospect.

Ed, Dar and Jake.

The part Mr. Smith took in the Jacobson campaign is also the subject of criticism. The charge is made that at a certain conference at which Mr. Smith was present and in which D. F. Reese also took part, certain inducements were held out to Mr. Jacobson if he would carry on his campaign in a certain way, and that, while Mr. Jacobson carried out his part of the compact, he did not ultimately get the support from Mr. Smith's and Mr. Reese's friends he had been led to expect. This, of course, is unfair both to Mr. Smith and Mr. Reese. Their compact only went to the nomination. They delivered the goods. Mr. Jacobson has no right to complain if afterwards Mr. Smith's friends concluded that their interests lay elsewhere.

An Unfortunate Omission.

Mr. Smith always, of course, represented the interests while he was a member of the senate. He was opposed, as no doubt he had a right to be, to any measure restricting the privileges of the railroads. He tried to buy the tonnage tax bill. He set his face against the sumptuary temperance laws. But in all this he did no more than represent the interests who have secured Governor Eberhart's nomination and on whom he relies for support in his campaign. It would have been extremely ungrateful in the governor when he found Mr. Smith in sore straits and even in danger of rejection by his own ward, if he had not come to the rescue. The only fair criticism that can be made of the governor's course is that he did not insist on Dar Reese being made Secretary of the State Central Committee. He knows how close Mr. Reese is to Mr. Smith and what a team they make when they work together. In his own interest he should have insisted on the executive committee being homogenous. It may be, however, that that has been arranged for Mr. Reese's office will be just around the corner and doubtless they will have ample opportunity for consultation.

Pinchot on the Grill.

I am pained to see that private secretary Wheelock is quite angry with Mr. Pinchot. Mr. Pinchot, it appears, carries insurgency to too great an extent. He should let by-gones be by-gones and get in bed with Ballinger. The people in Mr. Wheelock's opinion are sick of the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy and he intends to insist that nothing disagreeable shall be so much a mentioned at Governor Eberhart's conservation congress when it is held here in September.

Calling him down.

Mr. Wheelock is futher reported as follows "It was thought", said Mr. Wheelock, "that some of the speakers were too partisan, and that the Pinchot side of the Pinchot-Ballinger controversy was given too prominent a place on the program. On account of this idea, the governor yesterday wired Mr. Pinchot, asking for a conference upon the program, suggesting that there might be some changes made. In reply Pinchot wired that it would be impossible to change the program, as the arrangements had already been made.

"We believe that Mr. Pinchot did not understand the governor's message, because when we were in Washington, arranging the details of bringing the congress to St. Paul, both Mr. Shipp and Captain Thomas White of Kansas City, chairman of the executive committee, assurred us that the program would only be tentatively arranged until the local committee had a chance to see it."

Putting a Crimp in Roosevelt.

It is understood that Mr. Wheelock has also expresed some anxiety relative to the part President Roosevelt will take in the proceedings and fears lest by his brashness he might disturb the harmony regarded so much in the governor's interests. Mr. Wheelock, however, has learned with some satisfaction that Col. Roosevelt, before delivering his address in the Guild Hall at London, submitted a draft of his remarks to Earl Grey. He regards the precedent as a good one and is seriously considering suggesting to the Colonel that it be followed by submitting his St. Paul address for executive revision. Mr. Wheelock is confident that if it is submitted to him he will be able to make suggestions which, if followed, will avoid any possibility of offence.

Fixing the Ninth District.

Senator Stephens has been given a place in the Republican State Central Committee. It is understood that he will have charge of the governor's interests in the Ninth Congressional district. In the recent campaign Senator Stephens familiarized himself thoroughly with political conditions in the Red River Valley. No doubt he is just the man to secure hearty co-operation of Dr. Cole, Mr. Wells, Mr. Halcomb, and other defeated candidates. With Senator Stephen's cooperation it is hoped that even Elmer Adams can be brought into line.

Chronic Kickers.

I am sorry to have to report that the meeting of the candidates here in St. Paul was rather a stormy one. Although as a precaution a blanket was hung in front of the door, the echoes of stormy voices reached ears for which they were not intended. I am told that when Sam Gordon heard that Ed. Smith was to be "It" he just roared and that Julius Schmahl and some others were there to sic him on. However these fellows were sat down on as they should have been. Governor Eberhart was bound to have harmony if he had to use a club.

Clapp Making Sure.

I understad that although there does not appear to be any opposition to Senator Clapp he is taking nothing for granted. He seems to have small faith in the Republican organization and even looks with suspicion on Governor Eberhart himself seeing him, no doubt, in case he redeems the state a possible rival. At all events I learn that the senator is going ahead and perfecting an organization independent quite of Mr. Smith. In particular, I am told he is busy in the third district, and has taken some pains to hold out an olive branch there to politicians there without a recognized leader. I am told that by forming new combinations his friends hope to secure the election Clapp Republicans to seats in the legislature held by Democrats.

IT WILL BE A VERY FINE BUILDING

Brick Work on Basement and First Story of Court House is Completed.

New County Capitol is to be Ready For Occupancy November 1.

Work on the new court house is progressing very satisfactorily. The brick work for the basement and the first story of the building is completed and as the brick work has progressed Contractor Brady and crew have been putting in the frame work. Conditions have been favorable for rapid progress with the work and there is little doubt that the building will be completed by Nov. 1, the time provided in the contract when the building shall be ready for occupancy.

As the work progresses and the building is taking on form people are having an opportunity to get an idea of what a fine building the new court house is to be. A number of Thief River Falls people have taken occasion to express their admiration for the building. Others, not so outspoken, though perhaps approving none the less, have been making eyes at it. This is all very pleasing, and perhaps through admiration for our good works they will, after the court house is completed, come to love us a little more.

THING GOT ON HIS NERVES

Irascible Old Gentleman Found Himself Compelled to "Butt Into" the Conversation.

It happened on an elevated train. A nervous man was sitting in front of a couple. The man of the couple was explaining to the woman the wonders of the elevated system.

"That's the third rail," he said.

"O, yes," she answered. "Why do they call it the third rail?"

"Why, because there are three rails, you see."

"Do you know, I have often wondered why it was. It looks like it was higher than the others."

"It is. They have to have it that way."

"Really! It seems to be higher. So that's the third rail. Do you know, I have read and heard so much about the third rail, and never knew what it was. It appears to be higher than the other two."

"Yes. It is. That's the third-rail system, you know."

"Uh-huh. I never could understand it before. It really looks higher than the others, too, doesn't it?"

"It is higher. You see, they raise it above the others."

"My! Don't they do things in the city? So that is the third rail? It doesn't look any different from the others, only it seems to be higher."

"Yes. It's higher. You see—"

At this point the nervous man jammed his paper into a wad, turned about and glared at the couple and snapped:

"For the sake of argument, madam, we will concede that it is the third rail and that it is higher than the others. Now, what's the next point in dispute?"

The conductor induced him to get off at the next stop.—Chicago Evening Post.

Drainage Area of Ohio River.

Beginning in 1907 the United States geological survey undertook to define the full drainage area of the Ohio river basin in square miles. Its first important subject has been the Kanawha river, where an intensive study has been in progress. At the mouth of the Kanawha, where it empties into the Ohio river, its drainage has been placed at 12,000 square miles.

In 1908 25 gauging stations were maintained in the Kanawha basin, averaging one station for each 49 square miles of drainage. Final estimates of the flow of the river for each month in the year will require more time or accuracy in the full report, but from four of these stations an approximation has been made, interesting as to water versus steam power. In the bulletin of the survey is the statement:

"The Kanawha river drainage basin contains abundant water powers and also great resources of good coal, and if hydraulic power can compete with power developed from steam in this area it will be possible for it to compete with steam in almost any other part of the country."

Thomas Hardy's Birthday.

In the quiet that only a rigorously guarded front door can insure where the hero of the occasion is a world-famous novelist and the scene a cozy London flat, Thomas Hardy celebrated his seventieth birthday last week. From every part of the world congratulations reached him by post and telegram in this little eyrie in the heart of a London that he knows and loves a good deal better than some Wessex worshipers imagine. An attack of influenza had left him in no mood to see visitors, so, while pilgrims—many of them Americans—were tramping the path that leads to Max Gate, Hardy's country home in Dorsetshire, he himself was calmly sitting at his London tea table with his devoted wife, listening to the distant roar of the motor-buses tearing their way to London's "dormitories," as her northern suburbs are called.—Harper's Literary Gossip.

Bottle Many Centuries Old.

In a recent lecture in Paris, Professor Julian, a member of the faculty of the College de France, showed a bottle of wine which he declared was 1,500 years old. He said it had been found in the old cemetery of St. Seurien, near Bordeaux. The shape of the bottle was closely studied and this, as well as the place of discovery, seemed to carry out the professor's contention, according to a report made by a member of the academy.

"Which shows how many men prefer the penitentiary to matrimony," rejoined Mr. Peckem, significantly.

Serving Strawberries.

The delicious strawberry served au naturel can not be improved upon. Place a small mound of powdered sugar on a paper doily, then heap the berries around it, leaving on the hulls. When the strawberry leaves can be obtained use them instead of the doily. Nothing could be more appetizing on a hot morning or for first course at a summer luncheon. Have the berries well chilled.

Do not fail to prepare a glass or two of sun preserved berries. They will make a choice dish for the holiday table.

One of the nicest of pastries is the strawberry pie. Bake a rich crust and fill with chopped berries well mixed with powdered sugar. Cover with sweetened whipped cream and serve.

Another delicious dessert is made with angel food baked in two tins and put together as shortcake, with berries. Serve with whipped cream, sweetened.

Cocoanut and Ways to Use.

When the cocoanut comes freely into the market, many of our housewives get a fresh one, make a cake and give the children a treat, never thinking that they may prepare their own cocoanut for a year's use.

This delicious and wholesome nut may be put through the food chopper, first removing the brown shell and inside covering using the coarse knife in the chopper first, then putting it through the finer. Mix it generously with sugar and stand it in the warming oven of the stove to dry gradually for a day, when you will have cocoanut to last until the fresh ones come again. A half a dozen cocoanuts will make about four quarts in bulk. It may be dried without sugar, and is then ready for soups and salads.

A custard pie with half a cup of cocoanut added to it makes a plain custard pie quite stylish.

Have a dish of fresh peeled cocoanut on the dinner table for the children; they enjoy it and if well masticated, it is good food. In many of our colleges this is a popular luncheon dish for the girls and boys.

A salad that is well liked is made of fresh cocoanut or desiccated, well-washed to remove the sugar, equal parts of chopped apple, one cupful to a teaspoonful of chopped parsley and onion, and a bit of red pepper, chopped to give a touch of red and flavor, a tablespoonful of green pepper chopped. Serve with French dressing.

Fruit Salad Dressing.

A dressing for fruit has been a problem for many cooks who do not like the French or the boiled dressing on fruit. It seems strange that the fruit juices should not be more commonly used.

Pineapple, orange juice, lemon, strawberry and in fact any fruit juice, makes a dressing for a fruit combination which is especially suited to it.

Take half a cup of orange juice, a quarter of a cup of lemon juice, a tablespoonful each of butter and flour cooked together, then add the fruit juice and a tablespoonful of sugar; cook until smooth; cool before using. This dressing may be used on any fruit combination, and is well liked.

When a sweet salad dressing is wanted, boil sugar and water to a thick sirup and pour when cold, over the fruit. This is very nice on pineapple and strawberry combination.

A boiled dressing may be made by saving out a little of a boiled custard, not using sugar in the custard until after the cooking. This part may be seasoned as one likes, with onion juice, mustard, pepper and salt, having a dessert and a boiled dressing from the same dish, and saving time and fuel.

The mayonnaise is a salad dressing made by adding oil to a beaten yolk of an egg, a little at a time, alternating with vinegar. Add salt and cayenne to the egg before beating. A cupful of oil will take five tablespoonfuls of lemon juice or vinegar, to one egg. Beat until thick, adding the oil and vinegar a few drops at a time at first.

IF WE would reform society, or make it better in any respect, our quickest way to do it is to reform and make ourselves better."—J. G. Holland.

A kind reception is better than a feast.

Seeing Things to Do.

There are some people who are always seeing little things that they may do for others. Comfort, little attentions that cost little and mean much. To the ordinary plodding mortal who would be glad to do many things; but never see them to do until somebody does them, this art seems a mystery. It is really very simple and one becomes proficient by practise. One of the hardest things we have to do in life and one in which we have acquired little ability, most of us, is the noble art of putting ourself in our neighbor's place, and judging from his standpoint.

The practise of this gentle art makes us sensitive to times and seasons, tactful and offering attentions and generous in putting ourselves in the background. In traveling one sees more human nature in a week than we do among our acquaintances in a year, for even nice people, are thinking of themselves too much and too little of the comfort of others. One may endure the slights of strangers, and the selfishness shown by them, but in the intimate relationship of home life, thoughtfulness for others will make or mar the happiness of a life.

THE surest road to health, say what they will,
Is never to suppose we shall be ill;
Most of those evils we poor mortals know,
From doctors and imagination grow."
—Churchill.

Household Hints.

A cake that rises in the middle and bursts open may have too much flour in it, or the oven too hot at the beginning.

When any baked mixture has large holes in it, making it coarse grained, too much baking powder has been used. Many people consider the sifting of flour several times to be a great task, but with two pieces of manilla paper one may sift it in a few turns of the wrist. As one of the secrets of success in cake making is the flour sifting, let that process be done well, for whatever is used to lighten the mixture must be well blended in order to do its work.

The creaming of the butter, adding the sugar a little at a time is another important point. Then the cutting and folding in of the beaten whites just at the last, and increasing the heat in baking. Never decrease it.

Salad Dressings.

One of the simplest of all salad dressings is the one of oil and vinegar called the French dressing. Olive oil is so wholesome that the taste for it should be cultivated. Elderly people especially need the oil to limber up the stiffened joints and nourish the wasting tissues.

Where vinegar seems to disagree, lemon juice may be used. Use four parts of oil to one of acid, as too much acid is not good for the stomach.

Add a half teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper to the above amount, stirring with a fork or spoon until well mixed. Some tastes like a bit of onion juice added to the dressing or a cut clove of garlic might be rubbed on the inside of the bowl in which the dressing is mixed.

A salad dressing of sour cream with seasonings and a bit of vinegar is liked by many, on cucumbers.

Supreme of Strawberries.

Fill a hollow mold with strawberry jelly made by using the strawberry juice and gelatine. Unmold and fill the center with ripe large berries and powdered sugar, with whipped cream. Serve very cold.

Strawberries cut in halves and served with pineapple makes a very good salad. Using French dressing made with lemon juice instead of oil. The pineapple may be cut in cubes or the strawberries heaped on a slice for each serving.

Cocoanut Soup.

Put the meat of half a cocoanut through a meat chopper two or three times until smooth. Cook gently one hour in one quart of white stock. Thicken with one tablespoonful of rice flour or wheat flour, add a tablespoonful of lemon juice, a bit of cayenne and nutmeg, and salt to taste. Rice boiled until soft and put through a ricer may be used instead of rice flour.

Work of the Unfortunate.

Miss Mabel Nutting of the school of household arts in Teachers' college, New York, arranged the exhibit of invalids' work which was recently held at Teachers' college in connection with the convention of the American Society of Superintendents of Training Schools for Nurses. These articles were made by weak-minded people, one-handed people, paralytic people and even invalids of the kindergarten age. The handicraft shop of Marblehead, Mass., where the nervously broken down go to seek restoration by quiet work under medical guidance, was among the institutions exhibiting.

MULTIPLY ON YOUR FINGERS

Method Is An Invention of a Polish Mathematician—Serve as Calculating Machine.

A French magazine describes an amusing method of learning and remembering the harder part of the multiplication table. The method is there stated to be an invention of M. Procopowitch, a Polish mathematician.

He has discovered a way of making the fingers serve as a calculating machine to obtain the products of the numbers from 6 to 10, and also of the series of numbers from 11 to 15 and from 16 to 20, both inclusive.

For the first series—6, 7, 8, 9, 10—fingers and thumbs are numbered, the numbers running from 6 on the thumb to 10 on the little finger of each hand. Now, in order to multiply the number on one hand by the number on another finger we put the two fingers together, one on each hand. In finding the product we count the two joined fingers and all above them and thus get the number of tens; to get the units we multiply the number of fingers below the joined fingers on one hand by the number below on the other.

The rule is a little different for the products of the series 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. The fingers of the factors are marked as before except that the thumbs are now 11 and the little fingers 15. Join as before the fingers to be multiplied. Then for 10s add together the joined fingers and all above them and also add 100. For the units multiply the joined finger together with those above it on one hand by the joined finger and those above on the other.

For the next series of numbers, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, the thumbs are each 16 and the little fingers 20. Join the fingers which are to be multiplied, count the fingers which are joined as 2 and all above to get the number of 20s and add 200. To this add the product of the fingers below those joined, as in the first case.

Multiply on Fingers.

Perhaps the latter cases of this curious little trick will be more interesting than useful, but the first series will at times be an aid to everybody who is now and then bothered in his recollection of the multiplication table. A little experimenting will show that the whole device is simpler in practise than in description. Reference to the cut will simplify the study of these rules.

GIVE SOAP-BUBBLE PARTIES

Most Interesting Pastime for All Ages and Sizes—Clay Pipes and Castile Soap Needed.

These are most interesting for all sizes and ages. Good clay pipes and castile soap and bowls enough to go around are the needful things; also a room which will not be hurt by a sprinkling of soap suds; and one thing more—the smaller the child the bigger the apron to cover him.

A little glycerine in the lukewarm soap suds will make the bubbles brighter and more durable, and if a thick shawl is spread on the floor they will bounce upon it like rubber balls.

A bubble tournament is great fun. Arrange sides, with leaders. Let one side step forward in a line with pipes and bowls; then the leader starts and sees how many bubbles he can make with one dip of his pipe. Each of his followers does likewise, while some one not in the game keeps the score. Then the other side takes its turn and the side which blows the greatest number is the prize winner.

There are many different ways of enjoying this pretty pastime. Science has discovered several methods of heightening the colors in the bubbles.

THE DANCER.

She dances like a dandelion,
Fluff upon the breeze,
As gaily as a butterfly,
And quite as much at ease;
And surely she was always meant
To fly upon her toes.
There never was another
That could go as Doris goes.

The flowers she is scattering
Are no lovelier than she.
They fall in yellow showers,
As she gaily sets them free.
And she beckons them to follow
To the land where all is young
Where a thousand sprites are singing
In the early faerie tongue.

NOVEL USE FOR TELEPHONE

New York Druggist Finally Discovers Cause for Popularity of His Instrument's Number.

"My telephone number has become the cradle song of the children in this block," said an Amsterdam avenue druggist, says New York Globe.

"Ask any toddler hereabouts his name, and the chances are that instead of telling you that it is Johnnie This or That, he will sing out 'River 7823,' my telephone number. Yesterday I learned the secret of my phone's popularity.

"The youngsters have been taught the number as a means of identification. Students of the child mind have discovered that children can remember a telephone number better than mere names. If a child is very young or thoughtless or stupid his address, or even his name, doesn't mean much to him, but anything that makes such a delightful racket as a telephone is an object of special interest, and he can remember the number attached to it.

"Most of the people in this neighborhood have no telephone of their own, so they are teaching the kids my number, to be used as a tracer in case any of them get lost."

You look like a fairy."

SWINGING RING GAME IS NEW

Requires Very Nice Sense of Distance, Careful Eye and Light Touch to Do It Right.

On days when it is too stormy or too slushy to be comfortable out of doors there is generally a strongly expressed wish voiced by the younger members of the family that "there was something to do." The old games do not always suit, and most of them require too many players. Let us solve the problem, says Ladies' Home Journal.

Here is a pastime that is real fun, for it depends on skill. It is fun even when played alone, for you can always try to beat your own best previous score, and every time you try it you become just so much more expert. It is for girls as well as boys, so a brother and sister can spend a jolly afternoon at it without either wanting to see any friends, who are pretty sure not to come in on a very bad day.

You need two nails, a string and a ring of some kind, about six inches in diameter. If you have no old curtain ring or something else of that sort, you can make a ring that will serve your purpose perfectly well by getting a thin piece of board, marking a circle seven inches in diameter on its surface, and inside of that another circle six inches in diameter. Now drive a nail in the ceiling, if there is no hook for a lamp or chandelier already there, and another nail in the wall with its head pointing upward at an angle of about 45 degrees. Suspend your ring from the nail in the ceiling by a string just long enough to allow the ring to swing its center over the nail in the side wall and hang there. Now you are ready to begin.

Stand by the nail in the side of the wall with your right hand holding the ring close to the nail. Now push the ring away from you, trying to make it swing back and hook over the nail. There! Of course you didn't do it! The ring came back and struck the nail, but did not catch on it. In order to catch on the projecting nail the ring must swing in a circle. If you do it once out of your first ten trials you are lucky. It requires a very nice sense of distance, a careful eye and a light touch to do it just right. Not so easy as it seems, is it?

It takes a lot of practise to score three out of five trys. Get your brother to try it with you, and he will be astonished to find he is no better at this than you are. In fact, girls are best at this game and, strange as it may seem, their judgment of distance more accurate.

Try a game of fifty points, with "innings" of ten points each.

Of course, the winner is the one who rings the nail the most times out of fifty trials.

A Trifling Offense.

Nouchirevan, King of Persia, had a very violent temper. One day he condemned a page to death for having by accident spilled a little sauce over him while waiting at table. The page, knowing that he had no hope of pardon, proceeded to pour the whole contents of the plate over his master. Nouchirevan, almost forgetting his anger in his surprise, asked the reason of this outrageous act.

"Prince," explained the page, "I am desirous that my death should not injure your renown by being undeserved. All nations esteem you as the most just of sovereigns, but you would lose that glorious title were it to become known that you had condemned one of your slaves to die for so trifling a fault as the one which I first committed."

This answer made such an impression upon the king that, ashamed of his passion, he pardoned the slave, and also tried by his bounty to atone for his contemplated cruelty and injustice.

WILLIAM A. RADFORD Editor

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 194 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

America is a nation of home builders. It has come to the point that a man's standing in a community is measured by his home. It is distasteful to most people to pay rent. The normal man desires to have a home of his own for his children. And these children have a right to a home of their own. It goes without question that a man's work is made lighter as he thinks during the day that his wife and his children are under their own roof. It is true that all men are not able to have a home of their own. They are tied down by conditions that prevent their entering upon so worthy an enterprise. But the desire is there, just the same.

In nearly every town of any size the real estate men and property owners are anxious to offer inducements to home building, and in many instances it is as easy to pay for a home as it is to pay rent. The payments are arranged so that they amount to the same as rent and as they include the interest each month there is no difference, really, except that the buyer must pay the insurance, which is a small matter.

When you come to think of it there is really no excuse for any man paying rent when he can get a home on these terms. He cannot lose anything for the reason that if he should ever fail in his payments he has an equity that has a cash value, something he could not have if he paid rent. The sense of satisfaction in undertaking an enterprise like this is tremendous, for the occupant feels that he owns the place the minute he gets into it, and the pleasure of making little improvements and adding to the attractiveness of the place is delightful.

There are thousands and tens of thousands of families in the country living in their own homes today, independent of landlords, who never would have possessed anything but for this system of monthly payments. It is not necessary to have a large amount of money in many cases. All the real estate men wants is a small payment down as an evidence of good faith, or an earnest that the buyer means business and will not move in a month or two.

The house we show here is one of the type being sold in many localities. Do you not think it would be happier for you to live in a house like this than pay rent? You will have something to live for, and it will be the ambition of your wife and yourself to get it paid for as soon as possible. And you have no idea how easy it will be. This house is arranged with a view to convenience in housekeeping. There are no stairs to climb. And you will notice that the front porch is included under the roof. The house is 26 feet wide and 53 feet long. This house ought to be built on a wide lot that will allow plenty of shrubbery and trees to enhance its beauty. These things are requirements that should not be lost sight of in selecting the location. Entrance is had to a large living room off the front porch. This room is 12 by 20 feet in size. To the left is the library, which can be used as a parlor if desired. But the day of the parlor has passed. It is the vogue now to live all over the house. No longer do we see the parlor which is kept closed and not profaned except when the minister calls or sister gets married. In the center of the house is the bathroom and back of this is a bedroom. The dining room is of good size, and it will be noticed that ample light is provided for. In fact, throughout the house there are plenty of windows. The kitchen is 12 feet square.

It ought to be mentioned that if any person selects this design and wants to build, the best method is to consult a real estate man, if the intending builder does not already own a lot, and arrange to have the house built on the monthly payments plan. Of course, it is preferable to pay cash if possible, but as has been said before, it is not necessary. The main requirement at the outset is the desire to build, and when a man or woman once has such a resolve there is always a way to realize the wish.

ARE NATURAL ART LOVERS

Experience Has Proved That Even Small Boys and Girls Appreciate Fine Pictures.

"I saw a funny sight in the Carnegie gallery recently," laughed the frivolous worker as she came into the studio and began the usual preparations for the morning's painting. "There was a school being conducted through the rooms—apparently two or three grades, from the size of the crowd. I heard the tramping and looked around. Well, Halley's comet couldn't have traveled faster than those youngsters. At the head were two teachers, then the long tail of the children—and swish, swish, tramp, tramp, tramp they rushed through, never stopping to study a picture, but turning their heads from side to side trying to take in everything as they scorched past. I followed through two rooms just to see if they wouldn't pause somewhere, but not they. I hope they were properly edified by what they saw."

"Well, I've seen children there taking a far greater interest in the pictures than lots of grown-ups," remarked the serious worker. "I heard some small boys one time discussing the exhibit and one of them said: 'There isn't a bum picture in the whole show—they can't get in. If there was even one bum one it wouldn't seem so great, but there isn't.' Now, don't you call that appreciation, even if you can't agree to there not being a single 'bum' picture in the whole show? I watched those boys and they stopped and examined each painting with the greatest interest—it proved all my beautiful theories about teaching children to love all works of art."—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

GREAT WEIGHT OF SLEEPERS

Most Extravagant and Costly Method of Transportation is Sleeping Car Train.

The most extravagant and costly method of transportation in the world is the sleeping car train, which carries two tons of dead weight for every passenger moved. The great weight of passenger cars is due in no small measure to the great length to which these cars have grown in recent years. The body of a modern "sleeper," over 70 feet in length, supported on a truck at each end, may be regarded structurally as a bridge carried on two end piers. And in the case of the car, as of the bridge, the bending stresses tend to break it in two, and therefore the weight of material necessary to resist these stresses increases in a much more rapid ratio than the length. Moreover, the concentration of weight on the two trucks calls for heavy construction in the trucks themselves.

It has been proposed that a great saving in weight would be affected by reducing the length of the cars and substituting lighter four-wheeled trucks for the ponderous six-wheeled trucks now in use. The roof construction could be considerably lightened by abolishing the end platform and substituting entrances at the center of the cars and vestibuling the car bodies directly against one another.

But the greatest reduction in weight it is thought would come from the substitution of steel for wood and the application to the design of the cars of those principles of steel construction which have rendered the modern steel bridge such a marvel of lightness in proportion to its strength and the load it can carry. The weight of the present railroad cars is the result of too much coach builder's art and too little of the bridge engineer's.

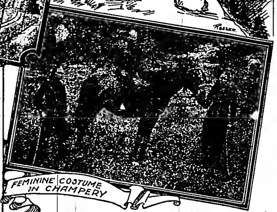
IN VALAIS

BY LOUISE MURRAY

A VILLAGE STREET: CHAMPERY

ON A COUNTRY ROAD NEAR CHAMPERY

CHAMPERY AND THE DENTS BLANCHES



FEMININE COSTUME IN CHAMPERY

THE DENTS DU MIDI

LE CALVAIRE

APROPOS of all the present talk about woman suffrage, let us take a glance at the inhabitants of a small village in Switzerland, or, more accurately, the dwellers on the mountain slopes about Champery, in the canton of Valais, that sequestered and charming hamlet which lies contentedly at the feet of its famous neighbor, the Dent du Midi.

There the sturdy peasant women have solved the "equal rights" matter to their own satisfaction. Votes were never a factor in the question, but trousers were, and have been calmly appropriated for their own use; so it is a man's equal in freedom of movement and attire, at least, that the feminine half of the community tend their herds, cut hay on the almost perpendicular hillsides, and clamber up and down the stony and tortuous paths leading to their mountain homes.

If Americans are as yet in almost total ignorance of this little spot, successfully hidden for years at the extreme end of the lovely Val d'Illiez, it is by no means undiscovered, and, owing to the recent foreign invasion, these fair traitors to the conventional skirt have become as shy as the proverbial chamois, and one must seek them upon their own heights during the summer season, when the new electric tramway which has supplanted the old-time diligence renders this village almost too accessible to the ever-growing tourist army.

En route from Italy, one leaves the Simplon line at Saint Maurice, rides for a few minutes in a shuttle train of doubtful comfort, and, arriving at Monthey, takes the tram, which immediately commences an ascent of the fertile valley. Through vineyard and chestnut grove, over roaring mountain streams and past various hamlets, the little train wends its way, ever upward.

Leaving the heat of the plain below, one gradually emerges into an atmosphere of crystalline coolness. Champery, the end of the railway and the last village in the valley, lies 3,500 feet above the sea. Except for the bracing air, one is unconscious of the altitude, as all about tower the infinitely greater heights of the Dents du Midi and the Dents Blanches, their white "teeth" so dazzling in the sunlight that one welcomes the almost ever-present curtain of cloud which veils their brightness. Some 300 feet below the village the rapid and noisy Vieze, home of that delectable fish, the "ombre," rushes down the bed of the valley from its source in the Col de Coux, another mountain, at whose summit lies the frontier of Savoy and a customs-house, and from whence one may continue one's walk in France to Chamonix.

The country abounds in walks and climbs to suit the most expert or inexperienced mountaineer. First and foremost of these is the ascent of the Dent du Midi, more than 10,000 feet in height. Of its seven teeth, the Haute Cime is most popular and least dangerous. Parties usually leave Champery in the afternoon, sup at Bonaveau, snatch a few hours of sleep, and are off before dawn in order to reach the summit for a far-reaching panorama of the sun-kissed Alps awaking from their sleep.

It was at this little chalet of Bonaveau that one party, finding their hopes of an ascent shattered by torrential rain, resolved to play bridge and amuse themselves as best they could until the wee sma' hours; but "English as she is spoke" and accompanying laughter evidently jarred upon the proprietor's nerves, for in the morning their modest bill was embellished with the strange item: "Extra: Pour bruit fait pendant la nuit (for noise made during the night), 5 francs."

To return to the village, its one street lined by chalets with gayly flowering window-boxes and neat gardens, hotels, pensions, and little shops, let us occupy ourselves with the cosmopolitan throng that wanders back and forth on any August day.

The Hotel Dent du Midi, Champery's largest and most modern hostelry, is the best point of vantage for such a survey. Choosing a comfortable chair from beneath its striped awnings, we call a waitress wearing one of the typical scarlet kerchiefs on her head to bring us tea. While waiting we may listen to the orchestra and marvel at the many countries of the world represented in this small corner of it. The English and French element predominate, and as yet the American is in the minority, but electricity, steam heat and all the commodities of modern life that especially recommend a place to his luxury-loving heart are fast doing away with its former simplicity. What a field in which to study human nature, national characteristics, and that intangible something which stamps indelibly the types of each country for its own.

There goes a former prime minister of Austria off for a walk with his beautiful wife, his fox terriers bounding in glee at his heels. A distinguished Roman and his two sons are returning from an all-day climb, their arms filled with Alpine roses. Here comes an English army officer, pack on back and alpenstock in hand, off with his guide for "the Dent." A little Indian princess tosses a bit of cake to her squirming and anticipatory dachshund. Out in the garden four hilarious Parisiennes are settling their accounts at bridge. A Greek countess flicks the ashes from her cigarette, as she sips her tea in company with a young Roumanian. An Italian admiral strolls into the "poste," and the inevitable American girl returns from tennis. So one might continue indefinitely, for Swiss, Dutch, Russian, Hungarian, and even Egyptian are all represented in this out-of-the-way little place to such an extent that during the annual tennis tournament lodgings of any sort, be it ever so homely or primitive, is at a premium.

It is in June, however, that Champery is at its loveliest. Then the fields are carpeted with masses of wild flowers of the most extraordinary beauty and variety, delicate orchid-like blossoms that might have been hot-house grown mixing with the more sturdy ones, and it is with real regret that one sees them swept away by the relentless scythe in haying time. In the heart of the village lies the newly restored parish church, with its unique and ancient crown-capped bell-tower, from which a veritable chaos of chimes peal forth on feast days.

Mention of Champery would not be complete without a word as to its favorite strolls, the "Petit" and "Grand Paradis"—two lovely wooded spots by the rapid Vieze, where one may sit beneath the pines and listen to its noisy music—and "les Galeries," a natural rock formation in the sheer cliff rising from the right bank of the river, and from which a splendid view of the village is to be had.

But it is toward the east, a half hour distant, that we wend our way most frequently, for there lies "Le Calvaire," a stone cross set upon a projecting knoll which dominates the entire Val d'Illiez far down to the peaceful Valley of the Rhone and across to the distant peaks of Cheusey, Gummfluh, and the Mont d'Or glistening in the sun. From this point, midway between the valley and the mountains, seated beneath that cross, eternal symbol of death, one may best watch the mystery of the departing sun as it sinks behind the Col de Coux. Then the veil that hangs all day before the Dent du Midi lifts, and the dying rays slowly flood the mountains' cold, dead whiteness with the rosy glow of life and eternal promise.

Finds Homes For Children

Recently two large parties of children left Liverpool by the Allan liner Corsican, Captain Cook, for Quebec. One party, consisting of boys and girls, was from the Birt home, and the children were under the care of Miss Birt, who traveled in the ship. This lady has been engaged for 37 years in rescuing children and has taken out over 6,000 and settled them in the Dominion of Canada. The party in the Corsican was the eighty-first which has gone out under the auspices of the home.—London Times.

Stag a Powerful Swimmer

The stag is not by any means afraid of the water, and when the necessity arises he is ever ready to give an exhibition of his swimming powers. Such a spectacle is not uncommon in the Highlands and excites little comment among foresters. The noble creature frequently takes to the limpid element in order to elude pursuit.

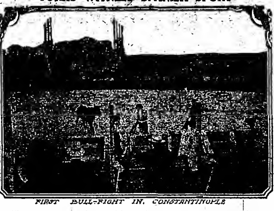
Only the other day a fine stag which had apparently been subjected to some molestation in the neighborhood of Melmsdale Harbor, Sutherlandshire, plunged into the sea and set his course oceanward. He swam lightly and rapidly and succeeded in placing two miles to his credit.

Two fishermen in a boat captured the animal, which unhappily was drowned while being towed ashore. It was a nine pointer and weighed about 18 stone. The occurrence reminds me of a similar incident which some four years ago came under my observation in the island of Mull.

A certain proprietor had ordered a number of stags from the south with the object of infusing some fresh blood into his ruddy herd. On arriving by steamer the animals were carted in their crates to the park assigned to them and where they were promptly liberated. One of the strangers was evidently much alarmed by his new surroundings and instantly made a dash for the adjacent shore.

Without a moment's hesitation he sprang into the water—which was at the time very choppy and intensely cold—and struck out gallantly for the nearest point on the mainland. The Sound of Mull, three-quarters of a mile broad, was duly negotiated, and after resting for an instant on the tangle covered beach the gallant creature tripped it lightly toward the rugged hens.—Country Gentleman.

TURKS WITNESS SPANISH SPORT



FIRST BULL-FIGHT IN CONSTANTINOPLE

The great sport of the Spanish people, bull fighting, was introduced to the Turks in Constantinople the other day, but the subjects of the sultan did not take kindly to it, as is proved by the emptiness of the grand stand, shown by the accompanying photograph. There were many protests against the granting of a concession for the holding of bull-fights in the Turkish metropolis, but all were vain.

LESSON IN FARMING

Thirty Tons of French Garden to Be Transported.

Plants Undisturbed While Earth Surrounding Them Is Removed From Reading to Birmingham Farm Demonstration.

London.—Some thirty tons of French garden, heavy with plants as well as "golden soil," are being removed from Reading to Birmingham.

The garden, which stood in a corner of Messrs. Sutton's trial ground at Reading, is the best educational model yet seen. In its new site in Warley park, close to the bandstand, it will cover a strip 160 feet in length, and a good three days' work will be spent in setting it up and, so to speak, naturalizing it. The garden will be opened by the lord mayor and lady mayoress of Birmingham, who were originally interested in the scheme by Mr. Chance—like his cousin, Sir Joseph Chance, one of Birmingham's notable benefactors.

The model is described as "educational," designed to "demonstrate the continental system of intensive cultivation," and as a demonstration it is not less charming than it is educational.

Everything is to be transferred just as it is, and not one plant of the many thousands will be disturbed. The frames and cloches and open patches of ground are to demonstrate the growth and progress of French gardening as well as the results; and for this reason all the spectators will follow one path in one direction, so that they may pass with the explanatory lecturer, as it were, from February to November.

First, they will see a bed in the making, one part pit, one part heaped manure, one part completed with soil and frame. Next comes a row of frames in which three crops are growing cheek by jowl—lettuces, carrots and radishes. This is succeeded by a row in which four crops are growing together, the fourth being cauliflower.

From the frames you pass to the cloches under which the seed is first sown, making a close green mat. Next are the cloches where these seedlings are pricked out at even distances, showing how the cloches feed the frames. At this stage the first part of the year is completed. The succeeding beds and frames illustrate how the soil is used yet again for the later part of the year.

This is perhaps the most novel and interesting part of the demonstration. The variety is most striking. One of the late beds is filled with cabbages, between which again is a double crop of radish and endive. These cabbages, though they have only been in the ground six weeks are already as big as cabbages which were planted last November. Five months have been saved.

Other frames and cloches contain peas which are already in pod, strawberries which are just ripe, tomatoes in flower, and melons just beginning to set.

SNAKES CHANGE MAN'S VIEWS

Pennsylvania Farmer Puts His Hand Into Nest of Copperheads and Stops His Grumbling.

York, Pa.—Farmer William Tracey changed his notions about the weather when he reached into a nest of six copperhead snakes in removing an old stone fence, in Dover township, and promptly resigned from the Knockers' club.

Before the adventure of his hand Farmer Tracey's remarks at the Eastmount village store were those of a weather pessimist. He opined that it was unseasonably cool and that crops would suffer if a hot wave did not soon come along.

However, if that particular hot wave for which Tracey hankered had been there when he put his hand into the copperheads' nest, it is probable they would have been active enough to have made Tracey the hero of a different sort of reception. As it was, the six snakes were too sluggish from the chill to move with their summer alacrity.

LOVE MEASURED BY MACHINE

It Will Be Patented by Man Who Declares That It Records Psychological Attractiveness.

San Francisco.—A mechanical arrangement which he terms a "love machine," and which he declares will measure the strength of human affections between lovers, friends or relatives—which will correctly tabulate the amount of resistant will power of any individual, and which will also tell in an infinitesimal fraction the amount of psychological attractiveness exerted over a person by another—has been invented by Charles Trudow, a mechanic, who lives on Jones avenue, Elmhurst. Trudow has applied for letters patent upon his contrivance and is seeking capital with which to start a "love machine" factory.

The machine is termed a "phystymograph" by Trudow. Its powers are such that the human emotion termed love is drawn into it when two persons grip a pair of handles, not unlike those of an ordinary electric battery. A dial which connects a contrivance of springs and wires registers the amount of affection the two persons who grip the handles have for each other. If there is no love between them the dial hand remains motionless. According to tests by Trudow its only fault is that it cannot tell the full amount of love between some extra affectionate couples. The machine will not measure the affections of two men—the dial hand remaining motionless, as is the case when there is no love between men and women.

GAS PIPE ITS OWN PLUMBER

When Fire Came From Leak a Lead Jacket Plugged the Hole—Explanation Is Simple.

Kansas City, Mo.—Chance sometimes works overtime to produce very insignificant results, and, as an example, here's the story of a fire in the joint basement below the Economy Furniture company, 813 Main street, and a pawnshop owned by G. A. Stevens at 813½ Main street. A lead jacketed pipe runs through the floor of pawnshop to a steam radiator above. A space near the pipe was left when the plumbing was done. Directly below the hole is a gas pipe.

Now, at exactly two minutes of 11 o'clock in the morning, George A. Stevens, Jr., who clerks in the pawnshop, dropped a lighted cigarette through this hole; at the same second the gas discovered a small leak in the pipe and ventured out. The cigarette set fire to the gas and in a few moments a little blue flame was scorching the floor of the pawnshop. By the time several fire companies arrived the fire was extinguished and the gas pipe leaked no more.

Now, here's the explanation: The flame had melted the lead pocket about the steam pipe, the lead had dripped down on the gas pipe and the leak was plugged.

City Owns Pigs and Pianos

Inventory Being Prepared in Cleveland Lists Everything From Canary to Elephant.

Cleveland, O.—The task of preparing an inventory of every bit of property, movable and otherwise, owned by the city of Cleveland, is now drawing to a close. Twelve hundred typewritten pages in the office of Department Examiner Brown, at the city hall, show a complete list of everything that the city of Cleveland owns from office blotter to reservoirs, and from lead pencils to Minnie, the Brookside zoo elephant.

The work, so far as it has progressed, reveals the fact that Cleveland owns at least three pianos and two organs, six canary birds, 77 pigs, 239 chickens, 60 cows, several barber chairs and a number of razors, and only the general schedule for two departments out of a total of 200, has been completed. There are 139 rocking chairs at the City hospital and 118 at the infirmary.

Cleveland is the second city in the United States to adopt the plan of preparing an inventory of all goods and property owned. The first was Lynn, Mass.

"I believe that the municipal code should require every village in the state to adopt this plan," said City Examiner Brown. "An inventory should be made at least once every year. It is a valuable thing for a city to possess, and it is a businesslike procedure that should be generally followed by cities of the state."

OLD ALMANAC BRINGS $385

Document Was Printed in 1667 on First American Press—Belonged to Justice Sewall.

Boston.—The sale at an auction-room of one of the finest private libraries in the United States, that of the late Amor L. Hollingsworth of Milton, containing some of the very rarest of books ever printed and some of the choicest and most artistic bindings by the foremost binders of France, England and the United States has begun.

There are some very rare Americana in the library, and the few numbers of this class which were offered aroused strong bidding. A copy of Brankenbury's Almanac, which the average person wouldn't give ten cents for, was quickly run up from $100 to $385, the highest price ever paid for a copy of this almanac, which was printed at the Daye-Press, in Cambridge, the first press established in the colonies, by Samuel Green in 1667.

It belonged to Chief Justice Samuel Sewall of the Massachusetts Bay colony and contains an autograph note of Judge Sewall's concerning the incognito visit of Lord Culpepper, his majesty's lieutenant and governor general of Virginia, to Boston, August 24, 1680.

Will Buy American Cattle

Slaughter Houses Be Erected at Smithfield and Importation of Meat Discontinued.

London.—To encourage the importation of American cattle into England, the city of London corporation has a big scheme on hand. It is proposed to construct a huge slaughter house and cold storage plant in connection with the Metropolitan meat market at Smithfield.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars will be spent on the scheme, and when they are completed the buildings will constitute one of the finest establishments of their kind in the world. They will be equipped with all the latest appliances and are expected to create a revolution in the importation of cattle into this country.

The scheme is viewed with consternation by the railroad companies here, who receive a large proportion of their income from the carriage of frozen meat from Liverpool and other ports to London. Under the new scheme cattle will be shipped direct to London.

This scheme will have a double advantage. The meat of foreign cattle killed in London will fetch as high a price in the market as if the cattle had been of English origin, while it will reduce enormously the necessity for consuming frozen meat.

There are already two great slaughter yards in this country—at Birkenhead and Deptford, near London—but their capacity is not equal to the demand which any considerable increase in the importation of live American cattle would make upon them.

Dead From Lack of Sleep

Russian Lives Six Years After Fracturing Skull in Railroad Accident.

St. Petersburg.—A puzzle to physicians was M. Petronovitch, a lawyer who died a few days ago at Nikolsk-Ussurisk. M. Petronovitch had hardly enjoyed a wink of sleep since he fractured his skull six years ago in a train collision.

For some weeks he was at the brink of death, but his strong constitution triumphed and he recovered and was discharged as cured from the hospital. A curious phenomenon then manifested itself. He found he could not sleep, but that did not worry him, as he did not feel the need of it.

After a while, however, he began to be uneasy under the strain of this unbroken wakefulness. The strongest soporifics had no effect on him. They made him ill but did not bring sleep. For weeks at a time he never closed his eyes. Then he would drop off into a light doze of two or three hours' duration and wake apparently refreshed.

This lasted some years and then he began to complain of intense fatigue, the only remedy for which, he discovered, was a vigorous massage of the head. As he was fairly well to do he could afford to consult several eminent specialists, but his case baffled them all. After his death his skull and brain were dissected, but the surgeons could find nothing to explain his persistent insomnia.

PRIZE COW TAKEN ON TOUR

Animal Will Be Exhibited and Lectured About to Enlighten Farmers on Breeding.

New York.—Zelma, the prize cow owned by the state of New York, will be one of the star performers on the "farming special" to be run by a certain railroad. She belongs to the state department of animal industry, and has one of the best milk producing records ever made. She is to be displayed along the route as an example of what can be accomplished by up-to-date breeding methods.

The train is to start from Ithaca and go to Auburn. Lectures and demonstrations are to be given at towns on the way—Freeville, Paruton, Groton, Locke, Moravia and Ensenore.

The train will be made up of two "laboratory" cars, a baggage car and a passenger coach. Besides the prize cow there will be chickens, spraying machines and other things which will help to illustrate the remarks of the experts.

But the experience of an observer is that those who speculate on horse races or bet on the stock market usually arrive there as pedestrians.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The "Senate combine" is in the saddle until November.

The worst feature of the Lind movement is the alleged promise of Ralph Wheelock that the former governor would run. It is wrong to take advantage of confiding innocence, even though circumstances alter cases.

The Colonel so often puts personal friendship above political principal that we are often inclined to doubt his sincerity. The idea of speaking for Lodge in Massachusetts and for Beveridge in Indiana! Surely this is hard [illegible].

Governor Eberhart's political path was thorny enough without taking on Ed Smith. The feeling that Smith and his political record is discredited by the voters of Minnesota is widespread, so much so that but one Republican candidate besides the governor was in favor of his appointment as chairman of the state committee.

In the registration of automobiles, the 10,000 mark has been reached in Minnesota. Twelve million dollars represents the Minnesota ownership in automobiles, says Julius Schmahl, secretary of state. When 10,000 was reached it meant that 3,000 new machines had been bought in 1910 by Minnesotans. Last year only 7,000 motor cars were tagged. Mr. Schmahl says the 11,000 mark will be reached this year.

Hon. John Lind has written a letter in which he declines to accept the Democratic nomination for governor. The people of this state were already aware of Mr. Linds' aversion to becoming a candidate for the office, says the Pelham Enterprise, but a large majority of the people think that Mr. Lind ought to make the sacrifice. They want a statesman in the governor's chair—not a cheap imitation. They want a governor who has the courage of his convictions, a man to whom no predatory interest can dictate or suggest.

IT WILL BE LIND.

John Lind's letter refusing to become a candidate for governor is not regarded as a finalty. It is the belief of practically all of the Democratic leaders that Mr. Lind will be nominated and that he will accept. This view is also shared by the Republicans. Particularly in the country districts is felt the need of a strong, honest, forceful candidate and a platform free from equivocation and promising reforms demanded by the progressive spirit of the times. The voters are disgusted with the reactionary platform adopted by the Republicans, and they like the Republican candidate little better.

John Lind is pre-eminently the bravest man in public life in Minnesota. His former administration is notable in the number and character of political reforms adopted, and this year there is no disposition to take a backward step nor to give the state over to the control of the corporations.

The demand for Lind is so insistent that the leaders of the Democratic party could not prevent his nomination if they desired, and there is no apparent movement in that direction.

Lind will be nominated by acclamation, and there need be no fear that he will refuse to heed the call of duty.

EDWARD E. SMITH.

"BIG BUSINESS" is evidently behind the Eberhart campaign. "Big Business" demanded the appointment of Ed. Smith as chairman of Eberhart's campaign. "Big Business" provides the sinews of war and "Big Business" demands certain prerogatives in the event of victory.

In order to secure the appointment of Smith it was necessary for the governor to make a personal appeal for him. Every other candidate, except Julius A. Schmahl, secretary of state, objected to him, some of them, notably Sam Y. Gordon, strongly insisting that Smith would be a millstone on the neck of the Republican cause. But Governor Eberhart still insisted on Smith, probably because he was pledged to Smith and "Big Business."

The reader probably knows who "Big Business" is. If perchance, he doesn't let Lynn Haines, author of "The Minnesota Legislature of 1909" tell him. Mr. Haines says:

"The commander of the coterie of politicians that manipulated things in the last legislature (1909) was Senator E. E. Smith of Minneapolis. An entire volume might be written about his character and achievements as the legislative representative of "Big Business." So far as I have been able to learn he has no other business except to play politics and run the legislature."

Flattering endorsement, isn't it? But, listen! In the brief biographies of the members of the last legislature, Mr. Haines says further:

"E. E. Smith, 43d district—the recognized leader of the corporation forces in the legislature; needs no detail mention here because preceding chapters have shown his powers and pernicious public character."

Say, dear reader, if you haven't a sufficient number of reasons to vote against the candidate for governor espoused by Ed. Smith and "Big Business" beg, borrow or steal a copy of Lynn Haines' book. It will give you ample and convincing argument.

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is a species of blood poverty known as anaemia. It is a condition in which the circulation is so weak and impure that it is unable to supply the system with sufficient nourishment and strength to preserve ordinary health.

The medical profession is divided in opinion as to the manner in which malarial poison gets into the blood. Some take the position that it is an atmospheric poison, the specific germs of which are breathed into the lungs and thus transmitted to the circulation. Others advance the opinion that persons become inoculated with the poison through the bites of mosquitos. All however agree that MALARIA is a blood affection, and any treatment to successfully overcome it must not only purify this vital fluid, but at the same time add the necessary qualities of richness and strength to the circulation.

The malarial poison destroys large numbers of the rich, red corpuscles of the circulation, and the peculiar paleness of anaemic persons is due to this fact. In the first stages of Malaria there is a bilious condition of the system, constant bodily weakness, poor appetite, and a "no account," tired feeling.

S.S.S. searches out and destroys every particle of malarial infection and builds the blood up to a healthy, nourishing condition. Then the system receives its required nutriment, the bright red corpuscles begin to multiply in the circulation, sallow complexions grow ruddy and flushed with health, the liver and digestion are righted, the appetite improved, and the system vitalized and refreshed in every way. S.S.S. is a safe and pleasant remedy as well as an efficient one. If you have Malaria we will be glad to have you write us describing the case. We will send free our book on the blood and at the same time our physicians will give you some medical advice that will be of great service to you in curing yourself with S.S.S. No charge for the book or advice.

A PHYSICAL WRECK.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi River, and became so impregnated with malaria that for a year afterwards I was a physical wreck. I took a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures and malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S.S.S., which I did about a year ago. The result was that after taking several bottles of the large size I was as well and strong as I ever was, and have never had a chill since. I expect to take S.S.S. every year as a preventive, and would advise everybody else to follow my example.

Hints on Cultivation of Corn.

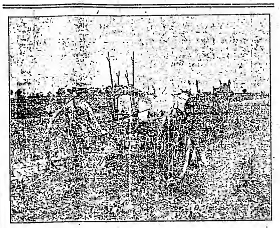
A. D. Wilson, Minnesota Experiment Station.

Corn is cultivated to keep the soil in good condition, to save moisture and to destroy weeds. To get a good crop of corn, it is essential that the plants have plenty of available plant food every day. Plant food is made available in our soils largely by the decomposition of vegetable matter. Decomposition of vegetable matter takes place only in the presence of heat, air and moisture.

Cultivation of the soil checks the evaporation of moisture; consequently, corn roots will be closer to the surface than in a field that has been plowed deeply and that has been opened up to a considerable depth by the growth of clover. Consequently, one can cultivate more deeply in a field that has been well prepared than in a field that has been poorly prepared.

It is not usually necessary to cultivate more than two inches deep to keep the soil in good condition. After the first one or two times, one can usually do better work and do it more safely by using some sort of a surface cultivator. Floats or knives can be purchased from most of the dealers to attach to any cultivator.

It is not enough to cultivate simply when the corn gets weedy. When the soil is dry, one should cultivate to retain moisture by means of checking evaporation with the surface mulch. When the soil is wet, cultivation opens it up, aerates it and makes it warmer. If one does not cultivate deep enough to injure the roots, it is advisable, when possible, to cultivate even after the corn is tasselled. This, of course, must be done with a one-horse cultivator.



A two-row cultivator at work. With such a machine one man can do practically twice as much work as he can with a one-row machine.

has a tendency to make the soil warmer. Checking the evaporation also increases the supply of available moisture in the soil. Cultivation also stirs up the soil and allows the air to enter more freely. Consequently, in cultivating, one has a means by which he can largely control the available moisture in the soil. In this way the corn grower has the advantage of the grain grower; because the grain grower loses control of his crop as soon as it is seeded, while the corn grower can do many things to regulate the condition of his soil by means of cultivation.

Corn, like any other plant, gets its plant food from the soil entirely through its roots. One should bear this in mind when cultivating, and avoid tearing off the roots as much as possible. This usually means rather shallow cultivation. If land has been poorly farmed and poorly plowed, the

The most economical way of securing a permanent roadbed is through drainage. It solves much of the good roads problem, in the opinion of the Minnesota Experiment Station.

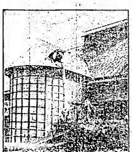
Sowing Fodder Corn.

Sow fodder corn thickly now, either with a grain drill or corn planter, at the rate of thirty to fifty pounds per acre, cultivate one way, cut with a corn binder, shock in the field, allow to stand until fed or hauled to the barn, is recommended by the Minnesota Experiment Station.

CORN FOR SILAGE.

Conserves Much of Its Food Value When Stored in a Silo.

There is no other way by which a crop of corn can be handled that will conserve so much of its food value, as by storing it in the silo. Where one can afford the necessary buildings and equipment, as much corn as can be fed in that form to advantage should be stored in this way. For silage, corn is usually sown in drills at the rate of about one-half bushel per acre. However, many of the farmers, who have had long experience in handling corn in the silo, are reducing the amount of seed used per acre down to about one peck, and often the corn is planted in the same manner as for ears. For silage, one should use the varieties of corn that gives best results in the production of ear corn in the locality, because good silage is made only from corn that is practically mature.



Storing corn in a silo.

The large varieties of corn, that do not mature, make silage that is too juicy, and consequently too sour for best results in feeding.

One can ordinarily expect about ten tons of silage per acre from a crop of corn. Cut corn for silage when the ears have become well glazed, or, in other words, at about the stage it would be cut if it were to be shocked for ear corn.

The cost of silage can be greatly reduced if several farmers own the machinery together, and, under most conditions, it is desirable to co-operate in the filling of the silo. Considerable saving can also be made if several go together and buy the material, and have several silos made at once.

A cow will use to good advantage, during the season, from three to four tons of silage. The more silage one can use, the cheaper it becomes per ton. It is usually not advisable to build a silo for a very small herd of cattle.

In addition to saving all nutriment in the crop, by storing corn in the silo, one gets the benefit of the succulent food supply, which aids digestion and enables stock to make better use of the dry feeds that they eat.—A. D. Wilson, Minnesota Experiment Station.

The most valuable farms were at one time sloughs and swamps and considered worthless. Drainage has made them what they are now—valuable—and a skillful engineer is constantly employed at the Agricultural College, University Farm, St. Paul, to instruct students and others in the science and principles of farm drainage.

"Go on," said the young and ambitious actress.

"I have in my time had rare opportunities to observe beautiful, graceful and talented women, and I violate no confidence in saying that you are the queen of them all. You unite in your lovely person that peculiar magnetism which lays audiences at your feet. Your genius, shining through all the deficiencies of stagecraft, enables you to triumph over every obstacle. So supreme are you that you have the right to rise above all conventionalities, to marry, to love, to discard whom you please, and no one will dare to criticise. Your work will live. You are the very personification of the highest art. United with this your perfection of beauty gives you the just title to a lasting fame."

"Is all that true?" she asked softly.

"Absolutely. Would you have me say more? What more could I say?"

She sighed.

"You might," she answered, "have mentioned my clothes and my figure."—Puck.

No Use For It.

A Washington man took his little boy to church one Sunday morning. A missionary preached, telling about the nude heathen in the tropics, and after the sermon a missionary collection was taken up.

The little boy noticed that his father put in a suspender button.

He said to his father on the way home:

"Didn't I understand the preacher to say that these savages went naked, father?"

"Yes, my son," was the reply. "I'm glad to find you were so attentive."

"Then, father," said the boy, "why did you put a button in the plate?"

ARE QUEENS OF HOMES AS WELL AS EMPIRES

EVER since Queen Victoria, some fifty or sixty years ago, roundly spanked a small son who was cutting up didoes—and that right in public in the midst of some big procession or other—the English throne has set about the most forceful example of strict attention on the part of its queens to the principal business of womanhood that the modern world has seen.

Not that publicly chastising a naughty child is of itself an index of the right sort of motherhood, by any means. But in these particular circumstances it certainly was. For it served to show the entire world that the queen of Great Britain and empress of all India put nothing, not even royal decorum, above the business of motherhood.

She did not, as many mothers might have done, allow the offender to keep on in his evil course until the royal parade was at an end, and then get down to maternal first principles.

Nor did she loftily wave him out of sight, as we fondly imagine all kings and queens may, when brought face to face with an unpleasantness of whatsoever sort.

Instead, she spanked sonny with her own right royal hand.

The act was simple, human and illuminating, even if a jar to that English hallmark of good breeding, deadly composure under all circumstances.

Queen Victoria set the example of supreme maternalness at a time when to be motherly and domestically inclined was not considered in the best of social form. Queen Alexandra after her, and now Queen Mary, continue to make a fashion of it, as much as anything can be made a fashion of, that requires all that is best in one to perform.

Makers of Homes.

In trying to get hold of the salient characteristics of Alexandra, now called the Queen Mother by her own wish, and Queen Mary, upon whose shoulders the royal mantle worn by Alexandra for nine years now falls, the curious fact presents itself that they have almost no existence outside the role of mother and housewife.

That is, whatever distinction they have attained has been through being devoted mothers, splendid home-makers, companions to their husbands when companionship was desired of them, and conservers always of the name they took in marriage.

While the English people have loved her, their feeling is nearer reverence than fellowship. She has stood alone in a little world of her own, aureoled by pure goodness.

Perhaps the fact that she is more than slightly deaf has caused this separateness from human foibles. Perhaps it has saved her pain, too, for people may whisper, but they will not shout about scandal.

Alexandria is a lover of horses and dogs, particularly dogs. At one time she was the champion woman tandem driver of England. She adores music and flowers. In Edward's dead hands she folded one white rose before he was shut forever from the world.

The queen who succeeds Alexandra on the throne, Mary, is the first British consort that has sat on the throne of England for hundreds of years. While resembling Alexandra in the most womanly of her traits—love of home and children—she gives every promise of being a more aggressive factor in the final summing up of the reign in which she figures.

Personality of New Queen.

She and her husband have led so secluded a life that very little has been learned of their private affairs—but it appears that she is renowned as a determined patronizer of English textile manufactures, refusing to wear anything not woven in British realms. She is no sportswoman. She likes to skate, but will skate on nothing but natural ice. She is a gentlewoman, and will have none but gentlewomen about her, so "freak dinners" and cotillion presents running into four or five figures are about as likely to win her sufferance as murder or arson.

Queen Mary is very good to the poor, liberally aiding bazars, etc. She has guarded her privacy jealously, has reared five splendid children, one of whom is a girl, and has allowed herself to be photographed in an engaging picture with the young prince of Wales riding pickaback on her shoulders.

Queen Mary was brought up in a straight-laced, rigid fashion by her mother, who sent her to bed instead of to parties. Mary is a cousin, twice removed, of King George. She was engaged to the duke of Clarence, the heir apparent, who died in 1892. Against Alexandra's will, but greatly to the joy of Queen Victoria and the English people, who longed to see an England princess on the throne, being against any more German alliances for the reigning house, she was won over to an engagement with her former betrothed's younger brother, George. They were married on July 6, 1893, when Mary was about twenty-six years old.

Their Realm the Home.

It is a curious fact from this point of view that there is no part of such a role not open for emulation to the poorest wife and mother among all the subjects of these queens.

Both Queen Alexandra and Queen Mary are famous throughout Great Britain as splendid housekeepers, exquisite needlewomen, practical mothers, with thorough understanding of the care of nurseries, and educators of their young children. As housewives and mothers they have lived with a single-minded devotion, not surpassed by the most rigid of British matrons.

To be sure, no evidence appears that either of these women is highly endowed intellectually, or could by force of her brilliancy and wit reign over salons. But they might have tried. That their natural promptings have been to devote themselves to home and children indicates much, however, and the force of example has been something tremendous.

Helen Vacaresco, the Roumanian writer, tells of seeing Alexandra in her youth. She pictures her as of fairy-like beauty, with the loveliest of blue eyes, the sunshiniest of golden hair, and the walk of a goddess.

Lady Randolph Churchill's "Reminiscences" bring her nearer, for Lady Churchill is too brilliant a woman to be satisfied with drawing merely a lay figure of royalty. She spent some time at Sandringham with the prince and princess of Wales, and her delineation of the woman whose dressing table was so crowded with pictures of her children and bibelots that she had no place for comb or toilet articles, has the human touch. An aged white parrot occupied the stand of honor in the middle of Alexandra's dressing-room, where he was as cross as only an old parrot can be.

Lady Churchill tells how the princess used to rap unexpectedly on the door of a guest's room at night, ostensibly to ask if the guest was comfortable, but really to speak a little word of sympathy, advice or encouragement, according to what had occurred during the day to necessitate it. The princess had abnormally keen eyes for sorrow and trouble, she says, and won all hearts by her unfailing sympathy.

Has Known Sorrow.

In 1871 Princess Alexandra lost a child. Later in the year Edward lay almost at the point of death with typhoid. During his sickness a stable boy was stricken with the same disease and died. Alexandra visited his mother, attended the funeral, and gave the stone erected over his grave. It bears this legend, which shows how gracious her tact was:—"One was taken, and the other was left."

There are numberless stories of her simple goodness of heart and lavish generosity.

When she came to England her bountifulness of spirit made difficulties for her. She gave to all who sought and could not believe, until time demonstrated, that people were preying on her well-known kindness.

The story of her betrothal to Edward, debonair prince of Wales, has a tender touch of romance, for he fell in love with her picture. She was the daughter of a Danish prince, whose house gave an empress to Russia and a king to Greece, but her youth was spent quietly in domestic pursuits. Her father was not then king of Denmark. The home was a simple one, in which frugality and simple living prevailed. There was a remarkable bond of love between parents and children, however, that sweetened all the short shrifts necessary, and lasted through all the after years unbroken, save where death intervened. This is in part demonstrated by Alexandra's recently establishing her summer home near Copenhagen with her sister, the dowager empress of Russia. Here, it is said, she will retire, in companionship with her sister.

Edward and Alexandra were married in 1863, when she was but nineteen. In all the years since then, during which she has had to pass through the ordeal of getting acquainted with the English people, and has had to maintain a tremendously difficult social role as princess and queen, not one single social blunder has been charged against her.

She has shown herself to be "a woman of singularly blameless life, loving and lovable," as one chronicler puts it. You cannot review her life without getting the impression that generally prevails about her in England, that she is a woman of superlative goodness of character. And not without keen intelligence, or she could never have picked her steps so carefully as neither to give offense nor seem to be offended.

For 37 years the wife of a prince whose scope, both by inclination and circumstance, was entirely social, a "good fellow" in the widest sense of the word, a man of boundless energy, superlative good nature and eager admiration for brilliance and wit in either man or woman, Alexandra maintained a character so self-contained, so truly pure and good, that, as one writer says, a veil seems to have fallen between herself and the rest of the world, so that not even her most spontaneous act brings her near to common human nature.

Tasks Ahead of King George.

About King George's past there hangs a romantic rumor of a morganatic marriage with the daughter of Admiral Seymour. He has made a good husband, however, being without any good fellowship or club notions whatever. He is no "mixer" in the sense that King Edward was.

They say that while many members of his father's court did not know him by sight when he succeeded King Edward, his was a familiar figure in the councils of the workingmen of the East End. However that may be, it certainly "listens good" in the pass in which King George finds himself today, called upon to stem the tide of one of the greatest political revolts that Great Britain has ever known.

In her pictures Queen Mary has the face of a little puritan, which she is said to be. Her training has not been such as to liberalize her views socially, at any rate in the way that Queen Alexandra's have been—or shall we say that Queen Alexandra has allowed it to appear? Queen Mary was born to a great position.

Married to a man sharing her quiet tastes, her lack of particular care for fashion and the ostentation of wealth—in fact, of everything that King Edward stood for, including unparalleled popularity—it is but natural to believe those who predict a startling reversal to the manners of Queen Victoria's court in England; chiefly in the rigid exclusion from royal circles of all persons who cannot back up brilliancy, beauty or richness with blue blood and unspotted escutcheons.

Already Queen Mary takes out a piece of needlework or a bit of crocheting for the poor after dinner in the drawing-room and works at it standing up, for she believes that it is good for the health to stand up after dinner.

Of course, the only thing for the ladies of the court to do is to follow suit. So they, many of whom gathered around the pleasant bridge tables of evenings heretofore, stand also and teach their stiff, unaccustomed fingers the gentle art of wielding the ladylike needle again.

It is probably going to be a thoroughly well-bred court at St. James hereafter, with a blue-blooded attendance. There will be no surprise in the way of introductions therein of celebrities in arts not commonly recognized as polite. For which reason it is feared by many that it will be a much duller court, too.

CLIMAX FOR GREAT TENOR

Caruso Approaches Finale in "Marital" Entanglements Through Divorce Suit Against Women.

Florence.—Enrico Caruso is approaching a climax in his "marital" entanglements. It will be remembered that during his first two seasons in New York at the Metropolitan Opera he was accompanied by a woman whom every one considered to be his legal wife.

This woman was really Mme. Gina Betti, the wife of a Florentine merchant, who under the name of Mimi Giachetti had achieved a certain success on the operatic stage, and who is a sister of the better-known lyric soprano of the same name. A year or two ago Mme. Giachetti-Betti-Caruso was reported to have eloped with her chauffeur.

Mme. Caruso.

Now the Florentine merchant, Betti, is suing her for divorce and names Caruso. Mme. Caruso, as she is still generally known, has written a letter to the press in which she states that she endeavored to seek a divorce from Betti ten years ago, but he refused his consent. It was then that she went to live with the tenor. Since that time she declares she has lived with Caruso as his wife, and has had two children by him.

She often saw Betti, who never seemed to resent the fact of her alliance nor care one way or the other. She denies having eloped with the chauffeur and says Caruso left her penniless at Mont Cherlee on the very spot where they first met and where he persuaded her to forsake her artistic career for his love.

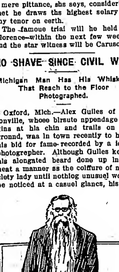
Mme. Betti deplores her unhappy married life with both men, whom she accuses of having failed to contribute to her support, although she admits that Caruso gives her $100 a month—a mere pittance, she says, considering that he draws the highest salary of any tenor on earth.

The famous trial will be held in Florence within the next few weeks, and the star witness will be Caruso.

NO SHAVE SINCE CIVIL WAR

Michigan Man Has His Whiskers That Reach to the Floor Photographed.

Oxford, Mich.—Alex Gulles of Ortonville, whose hirsute appendage begins at his chin and trails on the ground, was in town recently to have his bid for fame recorded by a local photographer. Although Gulles keeps his elongated beard done up in as neat a manner as the coiffure of a society lady until nothing unusual would be noticed at a casual glance, his advent here to have his whiskers "took" by a photographer created no little excitement.



Alex Gulles.

Gulles is the proprietor and operator of a saw mill at Ortonville, and 'tis said he locks step with that trailing streamers of whiskers as he winds the devious way in and about the swiftly humming machinery, indifferently among this luxuriant growth of human foliage. He has not had a shave since war times and does not expect one, striving earnestly to prove that what he claims is the blue ribbon winner for length, in whiskers.

He prides himself on having the longest whiskers in Michigan. And the residents of Ortonville, who have seen that winding trail of wispy, stringy whiskers floating about the saw mill over humming saws and buzzing set screws, give Gulles credit for as much courage as he has hair.

EVERY BREEDER SHOULD POSSESS DIPPING TANK

Even Carefully Kept Herds and Flocks Are Liable to Become Infested With Vermin—Inexpensive Plant Illustrated.

A Practical Dipping Tank.

The time to rid flocks of sheep and herds of swine of ticks and lice is during the warm months and then there will be none to bother with in the winter time and to annoy animals so that only half or no profits can be had from them. Of course while the flocks and herds are cleaned up, the buildings must also be properly renovated and cleaned up, or there may be a general reinfesting from them, says Wisconsin Agriculturist. Every hog and sheep farm should have a dipping plant as a part of its regular equipment, for even carefully kept herds and flocks are liable to become infested with vermin such as lice and ticks.

A convenient, inexpensive and durable dipping plant may be constructed on the plan of the one represented in the accompany illustration. The sheep or hogs are driven in at a receiving chute, plunged into a tank containing a disinfectant solution, made to swim to the other end, where they can climb out over another chute and return to the pens or into paddocks. The general construction of the chutes does not need much explanation. That is quite clear from the plan of the illustration. Good cedar posts set firmly into the ground three feet apart, with the exception of those at the ends of the tank, which should be no farther apart than the top width of the tank, answer the purpose of supports. Pieces of 2x4-inch studding are nailed to each pair at proper height to give the incline to the floors. Planks are used for the flooring and inch boards for the sides. The incline of the receiving chute to the right of the illustration has cleats nailed across its floor to aid the animals in making the climb; the decline has no cleats and is covered with a sheet of galvanized zinc to prevent the animals resisting being plunged into the tank. The cleats of the former are nailed straight across. A gate is attached at the entrance to the chute so that a number of animals may be inclosed at a time while the dippers are working at the tank. The distance between the posts of the receiving chute on the sides is four feet, and the height of the incline is one foot and a half.

The incline of the chute through which the animals leave the tank is the same as that of the receiving chute, but it is longer, the distance between the posts being five instead of four feet. The floor here should also be covered with galvanized sheeting and the cleats nailed so as to allow the dripping from the wet animals to run back into the tank. Unless this is done the supply of solution in the tank will soon all be lost, and the dipping made unnecessarily much more expensive. The cleats, instead of running directly across, are short pieces nailed at angles, so that their inner ends are lower than the outer ends, and do not meet so as to let the drippings run down the center. When sheep are dipped it may become necessary to retain them in the dripping chute for a time, as those with long wool will carry even a gallon or two of the dip in their fleeces, which takes time to drain out.

The dipping tank should be at least four feet deep at the end into which the animals are plunged to admit of their being entirely submerged, and should be about fifteen feet long, so that sufficient time is required by the animal to pass through for them to receive a thorough wetting from the solution, otherwise it will be necessary to hold them back for a time until this is accomplished. The deep part of the tank need not be longer than five feet, the rest of the tank becoming gradually shallower up to the dripping chute and the bottom having cleats or grooves across to assist the animals in wading along. At the top the tank should be 18 inches wide, but at the bottom a width only sufficient for the animal's feet is necessary. This will properly be about one foot.

The material of which the dipping tank is made may be either wood, galvanized sheeting or concrete. Concrete will prove the most lasting, and can easily enough be molded by the owner.

Ventilation Is Essential.

Good ventilation at all times, both by day and by night, is essential in maintaining good health with poultry. Much of the diseases with which the birds are afflicted may be traced for its origin to a neglect to provide proper ventilation.

POOR METHOD OF FARMING

Agricultural Implements Exposed to Inclemency of Weather and Used By Poultry for Roosting Places.

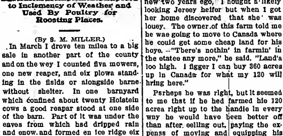
(By S. M. MILLER.)

In March I drove ten miles to a big sale in another part of the county and on the way I counted five mowers, one new reaper, and six plows standing in the fields or alongside barns without shelter. In one barnyard which confined about twenty Holstein cows a good reaper stood at one side of the barn. Part of it was under the eaves from which had dripped rain and snow and formed an ice ridge six inches thick. A big Plymouth Rock rooster stood proudly on one of the blades of the machine and there was evidence that this was the favorite roosting place of the flock.

In one field a breaking plow had been left standing at the end of a furrow in a corner of the field and the snow covered the beam. One handle was broken off. At the sale a fine reaper and mower were sold. The reaper was in a leaky shed but the mower stood in a corner of an alfalfa field. The reaper brought $14 and the mower nine dollars. Both were new two years ago. I bought a likely looking Jersey heifer but when I got her home discovered that she was lousy. The owner of this farm told me he was going to move to Canada where he could get some cheap land for his boys. "There's nothin' in farmin' in the states any more," he said. "Land's too high. I figger I can buy 360 acres up in Canada for what my 120 will bring here."

Perhaps he was right, but it seemed to me that if he had farmed his 120 acres right up to the handle in every way he would have been better off than after selling out, paying the expense of moving and equipping his new big farm in the northwest. The farm showed every evidence of neglect of small things. It was untidy, unthrifty in appearance and showed the lack of system. With such a farmer the bigger the farm the greater the waste. That ten-mile trip was a great object lesson to me and to my boys, who went along, as well.

METHOD OF FEEDING POULTRY



The device shown in the illustration gives a novel way to feed mangels, cabbage and so on to poultry. When the lower portion is all eaten off the tops fall down sufficiently to allow the chicks a share as well as the fowls. The rod is made to rest in a groove on posts set in the ground. The roots do not get soiled, and this proves an economical plan. The poultry will eat all, clear to the last bit.

Surface Culture.

Frequent surface cultivation makes the natural food of the plant more available, prevents escape of moisture and holds water in store for summer use.

Watering Plants.

Watering in the evening, besides aiding in the spread of fungous diseases, also causes "damping off." Watering should never be practised during heavy, cloudy weather. Sheds, heat and light should be considered. Plants growing in the bright sunlight always need more water than those in the shade, for evaporation and transpiration are always greater under such circumstances. Mid-day waterings, when the sun shines directly on the foliage, will burn the foliage of many of our common house plants. Shading during excessive heat will strengthen the plants and assist in retaining moisture.

Big Potato Crop.

On Lord Rosebery's estate at Dalmeny, Scotland, an acre has been made to produce more than 3,000 measured bushels of potatoes. This yield is so remarkable that the department of agriculture at Washington has sent an expert to Scotland to find out how it was made, and secure hints that will aid the American grower to increase his potato yields.

Kindness for Brood Hen.

Don't be mean to the poor brood hen because she wants to set. Maybe she has raised you one or two broods of chicks this season. If she has not, she has surely been doing her duty toward laying, and, anyway, she can't help it if she wants to set. She was created that way. Do not stuff her into a little, old, nasty, dirty hole of a place, on half rations, or no rations at all. Give her a good, clean pen, with plenty of feed and clean water twice a day. Good care will soon set her to singing again; whereas, ill treatment in her weakened condition may cause a disease that will take not only her but may spread to the whole flock.

Topdressing Pastures.

Pastures may be topdressed and should not be grazed too early in spring nor too heavily. Where pastures can be plowed it is advisable to plow and reseed occasionally.

The raising of clover, corn and forage crops furnishes a larger amount of protein for cattle and less feed will need to be purchased.

WHERE IT PROFITETH NOT

Attending to One's Own Garden May Be Good for the Health, But It Worries the Pocketbook.

Although once I used to toy with the stubborn glebe—and no glebe ever was stubborner than that of southern Ohio's hills, where there were four large stones to one small dirt—I am become as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal or any other symbol you care to use when it gets right down to the real agricolture act.

I have figured myself out as a dead loss. The more I try to do the work about my suburban lot the more money it costs me. Maybe I get something in health, but that is a problem that medical science will never be able to solve. Medical science or any other kind of science, for that matter, has never settled anything. They've taken every question to the moot stage, and there they've left it mooting. And who cares a hoot for a moot?

Recently I thought I'd get busy and do some of the garden beds. The place where we placed dahlias and sweet peas in relays last year needed spading and fertilizing and reworking, the hydrangeas needed to be loosened up about the roots, some pansies needed transplanting, the whole lawn needed raking and massaging, and I was game for the job.

I went out and spaded around a whole row of hydrangeas and found myself coming down with one of those farm appetites that used to keep father busy paying interest on the mortgages. Ordinarily I am satisfied with a slice of roast beef and some vegetables for dinner. This time, however, I finished half an expensive panroast, cleaned out the vegetables till we worried over what the cook and nurse would get, and destroyed a lot of preserves that we had thought would last till the middle of the summer. I did a little figuring after dinner, and if my drowsiness did not too largely interfere with the accuracy of my calculations I had lost just $1.50 more than it would have cost me to have some-one whom I need not feed come and dig around those shrubs.

Next morning I telephoned to a man I knew who could send out some help that would do more good work in an hour than I could do in two, and who would not lift my grocery and market expense a particle.

Hereafter when I feel that tendency to wrestle with Mamma Earth and see the earthworms writhe and smell the good smell of the soil I shall do so when I am visiting or when I am boarding at some American-plan hotel. I simply cannot afford to work in my own garden and board myself, since the cost of foodstuffs has become so exorbitant.

If I did all my own work I'd be bankrupt the day the first grocery bill fell due.—Baltimore Sun.

A BURNING ERUPTION FROM HEAD TO FEET

"Four years ago I suffered severely with a terrible eczema, being a mass of sores from head to feet and for six weeks confined to my bed. During that time I suffered continual torture from itching and burning. After being given up by my doctor I was advised to try Cuticura Remedies. After the first bath with Cuticura Soap and application of Cuticura Ointment I enjoyed the first good sleep during my entire illness. I also used Cuticura Resolvent and the treatment was continued for about three weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about the house, entirely cured, and have felt no ill effects since. I would advise any person suffering from any form of skin trouble to try the Cuticura Remedies, as I know what they did for me. Mrs. Edward Nenning, 1112 Salina St., Watertown, N. Y., Apr. 11, 1909."

Unflattering Truth.

A Chicago physician gleefully tells a child story at his own expense. The five children of some faithful patients had measles, and during their rather long stay in the improvised home hospital they never failed to greet his daily visit with pleased acclamation. The good doctor felt duly flattered, but rashly pressed the children, in the days of convalescence, for the reason of this sudden affection. At last the youngest and most indiscreet let slip the bitter truth.

"We felt so sick that we wanted awfully to do something naughty, but we were afraid to be bad for fear you and the nurse would give us more horrid medicine. So we were awfully glad to see you, always, 'cause you made us stick out our tongues. We stuck 'em out awful far!"

The village concert was to be a great affair. They had the singers, they had the program sellers, they had the doorkeepers and they would doubtless have the audience. All they needed was the piano, but that they lacked. Nor could they procure one anywhere.

At last the village organist learned that one was possessed by Farmer Hayseed, who lived "at the top o' the 'ill." Forthwith he set out with two men and a van.

"Take it, an' welcome," said Hayseed cordially. "I've no objections s'long as ye put 'Pyenner by Hayseed' on the program."

They carted it away.

"An' I wish 'em joy of it," murmured Mrs. Hayseed, as the van disappeared from sight.

"Wish 'em joy of it," repeated Hayseed. "What d'yo mean?"

"Well, I mean I only 'ope they'll find all the notes they want," replied the good woman. "'Cos, ye see, when I wanted a bit o' wire I allus went to the old pianner for it."

It Is a Mistake

Many have the idea that anything will sell if advertised strong enough. This is a great mistake. True, a few sales might be made by advertising an absolutely worthless article but it is only the article that is bought again and again that pays. An example of the big success of a worthy article is the enormous sale that has grown up for Cascarets Candy Cathartic. This wonderful record is the result of great merit successfully made known through persistent advertising and the mouth-to-mouth recommendation given Cascarets by its friends and users.

Like all great successes, trade pirates prey on the unsuspecting public, by marketing fake tablets similar in appearance to Cascarets. Care should always be exercised in purchasing well advertised goods, especially an article that has a national sale like Cascarets. Do not allow a substitute to be palmed off on you.

UNCLE AARON'S WILL

By G. A. RUSSELL

When my uncle died, the people of Frankfort were almost distracted between the conflicting emotions of grief and curiosity.

They knew, or thought they knew, my uncle as the richest man by far in the city. Silent, cold and reserved, no one had ever presumed to be his confidential friend.

He died without kith or kin of any kind in the world, except myself, whom he heartily detested. We had not spoken to each other for years, and both were glad of it. I regarded him as an avaricious, coldly calculating machine, without heart, conscience or human sympathy. He thought of me as an idle, shiftless dreamer, with the heart of a poet and the head of a fool.

Whatever the people thought of him, it is but fair to his memory to say that they agreed with his judgment of myself.

Therefore, when I returned to Frankfort—for I never long remained in the uncongenial hole—the inhabitants of that town were properly curious as to whether he would leave his money to his unworthy nephew, or to some worthy charity.

After the funeral I was called into a private room where two men were seated. One of them I recognized as my uncle's lawyer, the other as his banker.

They greeted me in a curiously quiet and constrained way that struck me as ominous for my future welfare.

Mr. Boles, the lawyer, got up and lighted the gas, pulled down the shades, and locked all the doors. The banker remained seated, offering no comment, while I gazed with fascinated interest from one to the other. Mr. Boles having at last secured the proper privacy seated himself and began:

"Mr. Gordon, I have a strange communication to make to you. The strangest that you ever heard. It is concerning your uncle's will. We three are the only persons on earth that are to know the contents of this strange bequest, and if you refuse to abide by the provisions enumerated therein, you are forbidden ever to speak about it. Do you accept this preliminary requirement?"

"I do," I said without hesitation.

"The first of all, you must know that your uncle was far richer than any one imagined. He died possessed of almost unlimited wealth. Not one, but many, many millions. If you accept the terms of his will, your letter of credit with Mr. Brenton will be unlimited. No check however small or great, will be unhonored; your wealth will exceed the dreams of Monte Cristo. If you refuse the terms of the will all his wealth goes to charity."

"Go on," said I nervously.

"The provisions of this strange document are in brief these: That all of this great fortune is to be yours, to spend in any manner you choose, provided you remain within the corporate limits of Frankfort always; and further, that you tell no one of the contents of this bequest."

The two men looked at me curiously; I was strangely embarrassed. Never in my wildest imagination had I dreamed of anything like this.

"Once more tell me the restrictions that will be placed on me if I accept?"

"That you are never to leave the corporate limits of Frankfort willingly or unwillingly, and that you tell no one of the conditions of the will. The minute you break any one of these requirements the money passes out of your hands."

I thought rapidly. That I should be compelled to remain in such a place was a terrible idea to me. That I should lose a fortune rich beyond imagination was not to be thought of by an idle beggar like me.

"I accept the terms," I said briefly, and hurried out lest I change my decision.

My uncle, I reflected, could have inflicted no greater punishment than that of compelling me to live inside of the city limits of Frankfort, and yet who in the world would not jump at the chance of being absolute monarch and dictator of one of the hustling young American cities, for such I would be?

Though I possessed the contempt of most of the inhabitants that knew me, I did not have an enemy there; and I knew that as soon as unlimited money was mine, these people would be fawning sycophants at my feet.

The best hotel that the town possessed was the Elks, a three-story building that stood on a prominent corner. It was old in design, rather behind the times and had been enlarged once or twice. Every one with proper civic pride was sensitive as to the Elks, yet recognized the fact that no one could successfully compete with the landlord, George Graham, in starting a new hostelry, for the reason that competitive building space was too valuable, and the price of labor and building material too high to make the investment profitable.

As I entered the lobby and advanced to the office I saw Graham himself behind the desk.

"Hello, Gordon, want a square meal before you hit the road again?"

Many a time he had spoken to a similar manner, yet today without telling so, I resented it.

"On the contrary I am going to stay with you for a time, and shall require a room with a bath, or better yet, a suite."

"Do you want Florida water in your bath?" said he, scarcely hiding a sneer.

"I want civil treatment," was my retort.

"Our terms are cash in advance," he replied, flushing almost purple.

When he named a price he thought beyond my means, I pulled out a check-book and wrote in the amount, signed my name and gave it to him.

He rang the call bell and as the first boy approached said:

"Here, take this to the bank and see if it is any good."

I walked away and several in the crowd that had been drawn together by the sound of our voices tittered. He had drawn first blood.

Perhaps Frankfort would keep me interested after all. I liked the prospect better. One thing was certain, George Graham and I would be better acquainted before long.

When I lay down that night it was not to sleep, but to think out plans for the future.

The next morning I started out on my plan of campaign. I selected the corner from the Elks that I conceived to be most desirable and got options from as many of the owners as I thought would be necessary to build a hotel the size I wanted.

Next I went to the tenants and got from them options on their leases.

I accomplished all this within one week, and so little was I known and respected that I succeeded in getting both the land and the leases at very reasonable rates.

Those who knew me concluded I had a little money that I wanted to spend in making a show, and figured the option money would be a little easy, extra change.

The following day when I took up the options and insisted upon deeds and terms of location being complied with, there were mingled feelings of joy, consternation and wonderment on all sides. I was at once the sensation of the town.

No one knew what use I was going to make of the buildings or ground, though I had an idea that George Graham had a secret fear of what was going to happen. He was respectful enough now, to my face, but from all I could hear he was as venomous as a snake behind my back.

The second day after my purchases the principal architect from a nearby city arrived, and we spent the rest of the week on the plans. My directions were very simple; build a hotel three times the size of the Elks, and without any restrictions whatever, make it the finest that money can buy.

The men thought I was simple, but he charitably named the venture Civic Pride, and we let it go at that.

I demanded the erection of this hotel in an incredibly short time, and as money can accomplish much in Frankford as well as elsewhere, I had the old buildings razed and work begun on the new almost before the citizens realized what we were doing.

As the new building went up, almost as if by magic, I realized what fame meant. With my rise came the fall of George Graham. That he felt it keenly I could see. I could further see that there was yet one good fight left in him, and he would make it.

When my hotel was finished and a good landlord installed, his was practically a deserted inn.

On the occasion of the opening of the "Frankfort" I gave a reception and ball. Among the guests was a young lady by the name of Della Cole. I knew the minute that I saw her that I simply must have her for my wife. She was at once the most beautiful and attractive woman that I had ever seen. She moved like a queen among the guests, and like a queen she accepted my homage.

I was both surprised and annoyed to hear, the following day, that George Graham was paying court to her.

It was but one more reason why it should be a war to the death between us; nevertheless, I was determined that her name should not be dragged into our affairs before we had finally settled accounts with each other.

It must not be expected from this that Graham was without friends. Far from it; he had a number, many of them intensely partisan, who would not hesitate at anything to accomplish their purpose.

Among these was a young fellow by the name of Reynolds who owned a jewelry store next door to the Elks. This cur had already circulated a number of most malicious lies about me, when I determined to put him out of business. I might have a sort of respect for Graham, but none for his creatures.

I bought the store next to Reynolds and fixed it up with the finest of furnishings. Then I sent for one of my out-of-town friends, put everything in his name, and placed twice as large and handsome a stock as Reynolds' in the store. I instructed my man to sell for one-half the price his competitor charged for an article.

Reynolds commenced cutting prices, and his end was so quick that he didn't even furnish me amusement or excitement.

In a similar manner and for like reasons I established and controlled a newspaper, a bakery, a harness shop and a theater.

The town was rapidly becoming mine, and I was king.

If any one disliked me or my ways they acquired the ability of keeping that knowledge to themselves; for, somehow, they found that my enemies, for some cause they could not fully understand, were rapidly taking advantage of the bankruptcy law.

During this period I managed to find time to pay court to Della Cole. I cannot say that I made the headway there that I did in everything else. Miss Della seemed to avoid me, and though I couldn't tell that Graham was making any progress, I was quite sure that I was not getting along as I should.

I was not a little puzzled at her attitude, and I remember one evening in particular that I called at her home and tried to get an explanation from her.

"Mr. Gordon," she said with a little nervous laugh, "you are so used to having your way about everything since your return to town that you imagine that I ought to fall into your arms almost before I know you."

That sounded so satisfying to my self-love that I was beginning to feel quite gratified, when I suddenly wondered what she meant.

"I scarcely know—" I began, when she interrupted me.

"Mr. Gordon, with all your money, power and talents, we of Frankfort often wonder why you bother to spend it all on us. Why you don't, in short, move to a larger place or spend part of your time in travel?"

"Why Miss Cole, don't you know I couldn't leave town—I mean I won't leave while you are here?"

A noise like the falling of a chair in the next room, or the violent slamming of a window blind by the wind, startled us.

That night when I was walking to my hotel I was seized by four ruffians who bound, gagged and threw me into a light wagon standing near. I fought as I never had fought before, for I realized what I should lose should they succeed in getting me beyond the city limits. We had nearly reached that point when I succeeded in jumping out of the buggy. The fall nearly killed me, but a passer-by saw it and came to my rescue.

What was the reason for my attempted abduction? Had anyone guessed my secret? If so, I knew that my days of power were over. While anyone would hesitate to murder me, I had enemies who would not hesitate to commit the lesser crime of abducting me.

As I thought of my stay in Frankfort I knew I had not betrayed myself to anyone, unless I had to Della the evening of the night I was assaulted. Had she proven herself a Delilah, or had my secret been overheard when I had almost given it away to her?

As soon as I was able and presentable, I called again and told the story of the assault.

From the manner in which she heard it I was certain that she had no hand in a plot against me. If any one knew they had overheard the slip of the tongue I had made and guessed the rest.

For the first time in my life I was afraid. A ridiculous ending was liable to come to all my pretensions at almost any minute. I pleaded with Della for her love that evening. I loved her more than I thought it possible for me to love. She represented the only thing in Frankfort that I was not sure of. The very desire of possession seemed to feed my passion a hundredfold.

Sympathy or love, I could not tell which, made her unusually kind, and while she would not say yes, yet gave me some hope.

The next day I went to my lawyer and studied over the contents of the will carefully. Then, I did a very unusual thing. I bought block after block of the business center of Frankfort, and as fast as possible sold what I had just purchased even if I only got half or two-thirds of the amount I had previously paid. As fast as I got the money from these sales I banked it, until I had a trifle over two hundred thousand dollars.

Meantime every one secretly thought I had gone crazy.

Then, I went to the girl I had come to love better than life itself, and in the privacy of my carriage, in the middle of the road, safe from listening ears and tattling tongues, I told her something of the story of my life, and of my uncle Aaron's will.

"And you forfeit everything," she said with wide and wondering eyes, "by telling me this?"

"Everything in the world I do not have in my own name," I corrected, "but I would give it all, and more, too, if I had it, for your respect, your love."

Soft arms stole around my neck.

"Yes, I know," said Mr. Boles, "I know all about it; you have lost and won out. Perhaps it is best, for I imagine someone suspected your secret. But what passes my understanding is, why didn't you get millions of your uncle's wealth transferred to your name?"

"It seems to me that with Della, my property in town and $200,000 in the bank I ought to do pretty well," I replied, smilingly. "Now, let charity have a chance."

THE SITUATION PUT GENTLY

Uncle Elijah's Diplomatic Answer to Slightly Unfortunate Question.

"A certain circumspection always obtains between gentlemen," remarked Col. Ashby Blanton of Kentucky the other evening at the Holland house, according to the New York Herald, "and it is instinctive with some men who are not far removed from the primitive. A friend of mine with whom I spent a week last winter went down stairs one night and raised Cain with the janitor because his flat was like a cold storage treasure house. He ripped that janitor up the back in the most approved fashion, and being an eloquent as well as a profane man he was so abundantly voluble that the janitor couldn't cut in with any talk."

"'And now,' said my friend, 'failing to get it here, I must go to a place where there's plenty of heat.'

"'Well, you can go there, as far as I'm concerned,' quoth the janitor man, who turned and walked away.

"Another example occurred away from the crowded marts of men. I was traveling in the Tennessee mountains last spring in a region quite familiar to me, as I had been seen there several years before. I was passing the farm of old Elijah Posey, a patriarch who had married his fourth wife two years previous. She had died, but I was, of course, unaware of the fact when I drew up and, after saluting Uncle Elijah, asked, 'And how's your wife?'

"The old man squinted at a tall pine up the mountain, shifted the cud in his mouth and wrinkled his brow in a perplexed fashion, but did not answer.

"'And how is your wife, uncle?' I repeated.

"'Wall,' he replied, slowly and with great gravity, 'waal, tu tell the truth, kunnell, I'm kinder out o' wives jas now!'"

Substitute for Wall Paper.

Among the peculiar substitutes for wall paper is that used in one of the New York art galleries. It is nothing but a huge rag carpet of neutral tone that covers the entire wall space. "I had it woven especially for this purpose," said the owner, "and my pictures never had a better setting, though I am bound to admit that the carpet attracts as much attention as the paintings."

He Had Been Observing.

"Why don't you call your invention the 'Bachelor's Button?'" I asked my friend, who was about to put on the market a button that a man could attach without needle or thread.

"I fear that the appellation would imply too much restrictiveness," he answered. "You see," he went on, giving me one of his knowing smiles, "I expect to do just as much business with the married men as with the bachelors."

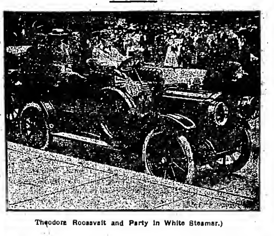
ROOSEVELT RETURNS AND IS GIVEN AN OVATION SELDOM EQUALED

The Mighty Traveler Goes Buoyantly Through a Long and Trying Reception-Parade, Showing Lively Interest in Everything American

The White Company Receives Unique Compliment for the Sturdy Reliability of Its Steam Car From Mr. Roosevelt and Family



Theodore Roosevelt and Party in White Steamer.)

After fifteen months' absence, exactly as scheduled, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt disembarked from the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, Saturday morning, June 18, at 11 a. m. To the keen disappointment of a large group of newspaper correspondents, Mr. Roosevelt absolutely refused, as heretofore, to be interviewed or to talk on political subjects, but his rapid fire of questions showed the same virile interest in public affairs as before.

If the welcome tendered by the vast throng may be considered a criterion upon which to base a "return from Elba," surely there was no discordant note in the immense reception-parade, nor in the wildly clamorous crowd which cheered at every glimpse and hung on his very word.

The incidents of the day in New York were many, but perhaps none better illustrated the nervous energy and vitality of the man, the near-mania to be up-and-doing, which he has brought back to us, than the discarding of horses and carriages for the swifter and more reliable automobiles. The moment the Roosevelt family and immediate party landed, they were whisked away in White Steamers to the home of Mrs. Douglas Robinson at 433 Fifth avenue. A little later, when the procession reached the corner of Fifty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, Colonel Roosevelt again showed his preference for the motor car in general and the White cars in particular, when he, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Collector Loeb transferred from their carriage to White Steamers, which were in waiting for them.

After luncheon at Mr. Robinson's house, the entire party, including Colonel Roosevelt, again entered White cars and were driven to Long Island City, where they were to take a special train to the ex-President's home at Oyster Bay.

The supremacy of the White cars with the Roosevelt party was again demonstrated on Sunday, when the party was driven to church in the White Steamers, and a group of some forty prominent Rough Riders were taken in a White Gasoline Truck to a clambake at the Travers Island clubhouse of the New York Athletic Club.

Every woman takes pride in the table she sets, but often it is done at tremendous cost to her own vitality through the weakening effect of cooking on a coal range in a hot kitchen.

It is no longer necessary to wear yourself out preparing a fine dinner. Even in the heat of summer you can cook a large dinner without being worn out.

The family expect to leave for the new home in about two months.

THE CASE OF PETER STRIKER

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Peter Striker was the son of Farmer Striker, and up to the age of twenty he had a reputation of mowing more grass and cutting more corn than any other man, old or young, in the township of Dubois.

When a young man has reached the age of twenty-one he becomes his own boss. There are farmers yet who will not have it so, but will keep a son on until he simply gets up and declares his legal right. At twenty Peter asked his father for his time—that is, he wanted his legal rights a year ahead of time, as he had a chance to travel about the country with a lightning rod man. The father refused.

Peter sat down under the big pear tree at the corner of the house to think things over. As he thought he fell asleep, and as he slept a thundershower came up. Almost the first bolt struck the tree, and a few minutes later he was found with his boots burned off, his old silver watch melted and in an unconscious condition. The doctor who revived the young man told his father that the victim might never be able to work again and that he must have the best of care to keep him from the grave. As a matter of fact, the doctor was all wrong. Peter had got mixed up with a thunderbolt, but the damage, outside of the nervous shock, amounted to nothing. However, when the doctor's words were overheard it was a cue for Peter. He had been working hard, and here was his chance to loaf. For a month he had to be carried about.

Haying time arrived, and Peter was conveyed to the shade of a tree down by the meadow that he might watch the men at work and wish he were one of them. By and by three or four bumblebees that had been disturbed near by came along and hopped on to him. The pain of their stings jumped Peter to his feet and sent him running for ten rods before he remembered his helpless condition.

Then a doctor was called in. He felt of Peter's fatness and heard about his race with the bees, but instead of pronouncing him able to go into the hayfield and sweat his shirt, as he really was, it was diagnosed as a case where sudden excitement had revived the muscular action for a moment.

Corn planting had come round again, and the father was working in a field near the highway when a man came along pushing a cart before him. He was bound to the village, and in the cart was a big electric battery, such as fakers travel from town to town with. The man was halted, and the farmer climbed the fence to see all about the machine. After he had been given a shock free gratis he asked:

"The stuff in there is the same as lightning, ain't it?"

"Just about the same."

"It will shock a feller so he won't know anything?"

"It would. If I should turn on the full current you couldn't let go of the handles."

Then the father told about Peter being shocked, and when he had finished the man said:

"Electricity works two ways. One shock will cripple a man, and the next will restore him to his pristine vigor. What your son wants is another shock. If it cures you are to give me a dollar. If it doesn't you need not give me anything."

It was planned that Peter must be deceived, and the plan was carried out. He was sitting in a rocking chair on the veranda, and the faker and his machine were escorted there, and the father explained:

"Pete, you have been going back on corned beef for the last month, and here is something to sharpen your appetite. You take hold of these 'ere handles, and it's like taking a tonic. I took hold of them up the road, and I'm as hungry as a bear now."

"But the doctors all said my case mustn't be experimented with," protested Peter, who scented some trick.

"Oh, this is no experiment! When a feller loses his appetite the doctors expect him to get it back the best way he can. I want to see you pitching into fried pork and taters tonight. Take right hold, my son."

Peter took hold, and the current was turned on full. He was frozen to the handles and yelled blue murder. After fifteen seconds it was turned off, and he jumped up and threw the faker and his machine off the veranda and heaved the father after them. Then, without a word, he grabbed a hoe and started for the cornfield. In three hours he did more work than his father had done all day, and it was reckoned that he sweat off ten pounds of fat. He acknowledged that he was as good as new. After supper he milked four cows, fed the hogs and carried in the wood for breakfast. At midnight he got up to go to work again. He couldn't sit still for a moment. He worked and sweat and sweat and worked, and at the end of two weeks, there being no more pressing work on hand, he tried to carry the smokehouse to a new site on his back and collapsed and died. The first shock had made him lazy, and the second had made him too great a hustler.

"What you should have done," said the first doctor to the father when told of the case, "was to sit him down in the middle of a pasture with a bull in it. In running for the fence the shock would have come on gradually instead of suddenly, and he would have been hoeing that corn and whistling hymn tunes a month from today."

Isn't It?

"All the world's a stage."

"And yet the young man doesn't always get the girl he wants; the burglar can't break jail; the farm is often sold without a grandstand rescue. How different life is from a melodrama!"—Ex.

Used to Glucose.

"While in Vermont I had some pure maple syrup."

"What of that?"

"I think I could learn to like it once I became accustomed to it."

When to Lift Your Hat.

In answer to the question, "Please tell when and where are, or is, the correct time for a gentleman to lift or remove his hat," we reply: Without consulting authorities of etiquette, in fact giving it to you offhand, so to speak, we should say at the following times and on the following occasions, respectively, the hat should be lifted or removed as circumstances indicate: When mopping the brow, when taking a bath, when eating, when going to bed, when taking up a collection, when having the hair trimmed, when being shampooed, when standing on the head.—Wichita (Kan.) Perfectly Reckless.

The members of the church voted that their dearly beloved and devoted pastor should have a vacation, and so he decided that he would visit a brother worker in the neighboring village. This good brother, recognizing his fellow worker in the Lord way back among the congregation on Sunday morning and wishing to show every courtesy, asked him to lead in prayer. But the visitor calmly replied: "You'll have to excuse me, dear brother. I'm on my vacation."

SOME ELECTION SATURDAY NIGHT

Three Hundred and Seventy Three Votes Cast in Annual School Election.

Automobile Parade Was a Big Feature of the Lively Occasion.

The annual school election held Saturday night was an election that was some kind of an election all right. In a single hour 373 votes were cast, and when the polls were closed at eight o'clock more people [illegible] the desire to exercise the right [illegible] those were coming.

People came in automobiles, in carriages, on horse back and afoot. A lot of gasoline was consumed in getting the voters to the polls [illegible] Barney Oatmeal. All speed regulations were violated and there were no innocent bystanders to protest for almost everybody participated in the joy riding.

Two members of the board of education were elected. The terms of office of Dr. N. M. Watson and Dr. J. Lemieux expired and they were candidates for re-election. The other candidates were Rufus Poirier and F. A. Grady. The scrap was [illegible] featured as it was strenuous and the crowd enjoyed the automobile [illegible] ously. Following is the result of the election:

Dr. N. M. Watson 256
Dr. J. Lemieux 251
Rufus Porter 121
F. A. Grady 111

Just what induced such an excellent school election no one knows. It may have been the desire for joy riding. Some said that opposition to the re-election of the old members may have been due to the action of the board in establishing courses in manual training and domestic science. It is hardly possible that this is true, for the action of the [illegible] has been generally approved.

But, anyhow, everybody would be [illegible] excellent condition for that county division scrap if the election were to be pulled off next week.

THE BAND WILL PLAY

The band boys will give another of their good concerts Friday evening. Director Brunelle is arranging a program of good numbers to be rendered on the streets tomorrow night.

Running Some.

A young man employed with the Soo steel gang at Plummer became suddenly insane Tuesday morning and left the camp and started off through the woods at a lively canter. And he kept going for hours, eluding those who were attempting to capture him. He kept going all day and all night. Yesterday he stopped at a farm house, utterly exhausted, wrapped himself in a horse blanket and went to sleep, and there the authorities got him. When taken the horse blanket was about all the wearing apparel the unfortunate young man had about his person. About his neck there was enough of a shirt to hold a necktie, and that was all. His legs and body were quite badly scratched from his wild race through the woods and he was covered with blood. The boy was so much exhausted that he made no objection to going to Minneapolis with his father who came for him.

G. G. Knutseth last week received a letter from his brother, S. G. Knutseth, who resides in Norway, and to his surprise the letter came from the Storthing, the Norwegian legislative body which compares with the American Congress. Mr. Knutseth was elected to represent his district in the Storthing at the election held in the spring. He has been in public life for a number of years but had never before been honored by election to such a prominent place.

JOSEPH SIEFF DEAD.

Passed Away at Omat, Washington, Sunday.

On Monday a telegram was received here containing the sad news that Joseph Sieff, son of Mrs. Louis Sieff, had died at Omat, Washington, the previous day, after a brief illness with typhoid pneumonia.

The deceased had been in the west only a few months. He left Red Lake Falls last March with a string of horses belonging to his step father, Louis Sieff. The horses were used by A. Guthrie & Co., railroad contractors, and Joe was there to look after the horses.

A few weeks ago, in a letter to his parents, he said that he was not feeling very well, but he was not alarmed over his condition. On the 9th of July he rode up to a ranch on horseback and told the people there that he was sick. There he was cared for by the lady of the house until he could be taken to the company hospital at Omat. He seemed to improve and encouraging reports came from the west until the announcement of his death which came as a shock to the family and many friends in this city.

Deceased was a bright boy and the announcement of his untimely death causes general regret. He was seventeen years old last December. He was born in Chicago but the family had lived in Red Lake Falls for a number of years. He is survived by his mother, his step father, five brothers and two sisters.

The remains were shipped to Chicago and are to be interred at Waldheim cemetery beside those of his father. All of the members of the family have gone to Chicago to be in attendance at the funeral.

WAS A GOOD GAME

Contest Between Fosston and Red Lake Was Good to Look Upon.

The ball game Sunday between the locals and the fast Fosston team was a good scrappy game and there was much in it to please the fans, even though the locals did not pull out a victory. It was very much a pitchers battle with Garcean for Red Lake and Narveson for Fosston doing excellent work. The hits were few and scattering except in two or three innings when good batting brought in a few runs. Both pitchers were given good support and the crowd was well pleased with the exhibition.

Following is the score by innings:

Fosston 0-0-0-0-3-2-0-0-0—5
R. L. Falls 0-0-0-0-0-0-3-0-0—3

Terrebonne 17; Dorothy, 9.

After the big game there was an interesting contest between Terrebonne and Dorothy for a purse of $10.00 offered by Manager Nelson of the local team. Terrebonne took the game by a score of 17 to 9.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT.

C. G. Selvig of Glencoe Goes to Crookston Farm School.

The superintendency of the Crookston agricultural school, made vacant by the death of the late Supt. Wm. Robertson, has been filled by the appointment of C. G. Selvig, superintendent of the schools at Glencoe, Minn. Mr. Selvig visited Crookston recently, after having been tendered the place, and has decided to accept the appointment.

The new superintendent is a very capable school man and there is no doubt that his experience and ability qualify him for the position. The Glencoe school is one of the ten high schools in the state doing practical work in agriculture and Mr. Selvig has in a brief time worked out a very effective course of study, and while that was being done the efficiency of the high school, which is one of the strong high schools in the state, has been maintained.

The local ball team will go to Crookston Sunday for a game with the Brandows of that city. On the same day Thief River Falls will play the cubs and a special train will take the teams and fans from the two towns. Both games will be played in the afternoon, one following the other.

ROOSEVELT AT THE STATE FAIR

The Mighty Huntsman Will Be the Star Attraction One Day of the Fair.

The Coming State Fair to be the Biggest Pumpkin Show Ever.

The board of managers of the state fair have for the past few months been very enthusiastic over the prospects for the 1910 fair. They have made many assertions regarding the increase in amounts paid in premiums, the increase in industrial and educational exhibits, the wonderful attractions, race program, etc., but now they announce a feature attraction that will surely pack the state fair grounds to its utmost capacity, for Col. Theodore Roosevelt, who is to address the national conservation congress, to be held in St. Paul the week of the state fair, will undoubtedly speak on the grounds some day of the week, probably on Tuesday.

Fair week this year will be a most important one for the Twin Cities and the entire state. The meeting of the conservation congress in St. Paul, the presence of Col. Roosevelt in the Twin cities and at the fair, the meeting of the congressional committee in the Pinchot Ballinger case in Minneapolis, the flights of Write Brothers' aeroplanes, and the many other State Fair features, and will go towards making Minnesota and the Twin Cities the mecca and news center of the entire United States for six big days.

Every necessary preparation will be made to take care of fair ground visitors this year. Many more sidewalks are being put in, all streets will be graded and sprinkled with oil, which will reduce the dust question to a minimum, the new grand stand will be painted with dust and water proof paint, and more attention will be given to the sanitary condition of the entire grounds.

Many thousands of hot-house plants and shrubs have been planted by the state fair managers, and several of the individual exhibitors have gone to great expense in making their buildings and surroundings more attractive with new paint, flowers, shrubs, etc.

There is a big surprise in store for all who visit the 1910 Minnesota State Fair, and even Col. Roosevelt will witness a few things not seen on his famous fourteen month's trip.

RED LAKE COUNTY FAIR

The annual fair of the Red Lake County Agricultural society will be held at Thief River Falls Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, August 3, 4 and 5. The management promises a fine race program, some good special features, good exhibits of live stock, and as good exhibits of agricultural products as is possible at the early date on which the fair is to be held.

Mrs. Sarah Converse.

Mrs. Sarah Converse passed away at her home in this city last Friday morning. Mrs. Converse had been ill less than two weeks and her illness had not been so serious as to cause alarm. On the day previous to her death she seemed much improved and the announcement of her death came as a shock to relatives and friends.

Mrs. Converse came to Red Lake Falls to reside about a month ago. However, she resided here a number of years ago, at a time when her husband was deputy county auditor, and she had a wide circle of friends and acquaintences here. Mrs. Converse was a woman of many fine qualities and her death causes much regret.

The remains were taken to Cass Lake, the former home of the deceased, Saturday and the funeral was held at that place Sunday.

Deceased is survived by her husband, I. D. Converse, editor of the St. Hilaire Spectator, by her son, M. A. Converse of this city, and by the three young children of M. A. Converse who had lived with their grandmother since the death of their mother.

Miss Maranna Crompo is visiting with her sister, Mrs. Hall, at Crookston.

DEATH OF A PIONEER

Joseph H. Leblanc Passed Away Saturday Evening.

Joseph Leblanc, one of the pioneers of Red Lake county, passed away at his home in Lambert Saturday evening. Death was due to heart failure, the infirmities of old age contributing to the patient's weakness.

Mr. Leblanc was born in Canada and was about seventy years old. Thirty years ago he came to Red Lake county and homesteaded the land in Poplar River which is now the fine farm home of Thos. Connors. He was one of the pioneers of the town and county. About ten years ago he moved to Lambert and engaged in the general merchandise business in which he continued until recently, being a member of the firm of Doucet & Leblanc.

Funeral services were held at the Catholic church, of which deceased was a member, and interment was at Terrebonne. Mr. Leblanc was a man widely known in southern Red Lake county and had many friends and acquaintances who held him in high esteem.

Deceased is survived by his widow, by three daughters, Mrs. Geo. Morinville of Crookston and Mrs. A. Generaux and Mrs. Octave Gagnon of Terrebonne, and one son, Urcis Leblanc of Windsor, Minn.

PENNINGTON GLOOMY

Soo President says North Dakota crops Will Be Far Below Normal.

Edmund Pennington, president of the Soo railroad returned to Minneapolis Saturday from a tour of inspection of the crops in North and South Dakota. His size-up of this year's crop is gloomy.

Mr. Pennington told St. Paul newspapers that after ten years of immense crops, the farmers are confronted with a freakish situation. "Not more than 10,000,000 bushels of wheat," he says, "will be exported from North Dakota. The rest will be used in flour and feed. Ten and a half million bushels will be used for feed next year, and about five million for flour. The production is then, about 25 per cent of the normal. Oats and barley crops are failures. The flax situation is still a question." South Dakota crops, Mr. Pennington says, are a little better, due to the early propitious weather conditions.

Mr. Pennington says, however, that the state will not be hit as hard as it would if it did not have a succession of fat years to fall back on.

The Cost of a Field of Grain.

Few farmers know the labor cost of a field of grain. Few know whether the crop harvested pays the labor cost. It is less difficult than troublesome to keep a record, but if the farmer will carry a little book and make a memorandum of the hours actually spent in plowing, in preparing the seed bed, in sowing or planting, in cultivating, in harvesting—in fact a record, by hours, of all the time consumed by man, or man and team, he will discover a new light and begin to find remedies. An account should be kept with each field, as with an individual. Charge the field with labor at a price the farmer would pay for it if he hired the work done. Each item of it should be charged to the field. If a machine is broken charge the expenses of repairs to the field in which the accident occurs. When the crop is taken off, credit the field with its value. The difference between the two footings will show where the loss or gain falls. Going farther into bookkeeping, the cost of seed to which the cost of cleaning etc. might then be added and made a part of the record. When the farmers are making but 4 per cent on their investment in Minnesota, on an average as shown by Experiment Station reports at University farm, some making, others losing money, each should know for himself what he is doing, and if losing, apply the remedy and stop leak of prosperity.

REPUBLICANS ORGANIZE FOR CAMPAIGN

But all is Not Harmonious—Some of the Old Heads Not Satisfied.

Conservation as a Political Issue in the State of Minnesota.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, July 19—The meeting in St. Paul last Thursday evening to take the initial steps in organizing the Ramsey county Progressive Republican League was in some results a remarkable one. The attendance while not large, a mass meeting was not contemplated, appeared to represent fairly the business and professional men of the city. While the younger element predominated, there were quite a number of older men there who are accustomed to take part in the political activities of the city. The older as well as the younger men seemed very much in earnest.

A Leader in Despair.

One of these older men was Frank B. Doran, a former mayor of St. Paul. Mr. Doran's Republicanism has never been called in question and he has been in active political life longer than a good many of us have been on earth at all, having been present at the birth of the party away back in the late fifties. To judge from his pessimistic line of talk he evidently anticipates living long enough unless something comes out of the progressive movement, to be present at its obsequies. He even went so far as to suggest the formation of a new party. The parallel was made between the government of the country before the war being practically dictated by the slave-holding interests and the government of today which Mr. Doran and other Republican speakers at this meeting declared to be so subservient to special interests that the people have no representation either in congress or at the council board. This is the kind of a thing the Progressive Republicans of Ramsey county are organiziing to do their share in remedying.

Hammering Ed Smith.

Nor did the Progressive Republicans stop at denouncing party management and party leadership in Washington. It is common enough to do that sort of thing while remaining conveniently blind to what is going on under one's nose either in state or municipal affairs. Not only did Congressman Stevens come in for scoring because of his subserviency to the Cannon machine, but, by implication the whip was laid on Governor Eberhart's back over Ed. Smith's shoulders. Quite a vigorous protest was made by formal resolution against Ed. Smith's appointment on the Republican State Central committee, the charges being made that "he has shown himself consistently and decidedly favorable to public service corporations desiring special legislation." Senator Smith's record was cited to prove this, not, however, as conclusively as it easily might have been.

Progressives Tied Up.

Evidently some one has a string even on the progressive Repbulicans of St. Paul; for they were careful to avoid any reference to some of Mr. Smith's most notorious affiliations. Jim Peterson of Minneapolis, a Hennepin county Progressive, who was down to encourage his Ramsey county brethern, took occasion to refer to the St. Paul considerations for certain interests active in politics, and to administer a tender rebuke. He asked them why they did not, like the Hennepin county Republicans, bawl out the names of the corporations who were dipping into politics. To refer to them merely as the interests, he intimated was child's play. When the Hennepin county Republicans got after them they called them by name—the Great Northern railroad, the Twin City Rapid Transit company, the United States Steel Corporations, the Consolidated Brewing interests. The St. Paul boys, Mr. Peterson suggested, should pluck up courage and do the same thing.

Really when it comes to that, why don't they? Why so many mouthed? Why hesitate to speak of Ed. Smith's labors in connection with the tonnage tax bill? Why not mention his opposition to temperance legislation? Are the young attorneys who framed the St. Paul progressive platform solicitous not to offend prospective clients. Its easy to hammer heads at Washington by wireless. Why not take a crack at the crowns bobbing up under our nose?

A New Crusade.

Incidently that appears, according to Mr. Peterson, to be what the Hennepin county chaps are going to do. They've got a lot of spell binders over there. These have a lot of eloquence on tap which they must shoot off or bust. So the Progressive Republicans League is going to buy a big tent for them and they are going to hold political camp meetings in it. They are going to move the tent around. When they have done enough evangelistic work in one ward they are going to start off to hold revival meetings in another, and the orators at these meetings, so says Mr. Peterson, are not going to be satisfied with bawling out the names of offending corporations as referred to above; they are going to grill objectional congressional candidates and legislative candidates and candidates for county and city offices and if they start out at that kind of thing in Ramsey county from present prospects they are likely to have their hands full, as it is usually represented in the legislature by men whose political reputations would stand fumigating. Taking it for all in all we are looking for lively times in the Twin cities during the approaching campaign in which the Progressive Republicans will have a chance to show the metal they are made of.

Conservatives Squabbling.

The state capitol folks have been doing some insurging themselves, by the way. It appears that the National Conservation Congress brands of conservation, unlike the Eberhart brand of conservation, wasn't framed up to please everybody, so last week Eberhart hiked down to Chicago to show the national conservationists how, and took along certain representatives of the Twin city jobbers and manufacturers to tell the national conservationists about the kind of program they must prepare before their clients would put up for convention expenses.

A High Old Time.

From what can be gathered from the reports they had a regular monkey and parrot time at the conference in the Windy City, both sides doing a lot of loud talking and the National conservationists failing to be convinced that real conservation can be talked without giving offence to timber thieves and iron and coal land and waterpower grabbers. From the reports that come from Chicago they appear to have some suspicion that our good governor has somebody behind him pulling strings. One report has it that "Senator Nelson of Minnesota and Hill the railroad magnate are the chief factors in the opposition to the program which has been prepared." The Chicago Record Herald reports the view of the National conservationists as follows:

"The officers of the congress denied that they had tried to 'pack' the program. They objected also to the St. Paul plan of inviting five western governors to speak, on the ground that most of the western governors stand for state rather than national conservation. They intimated also that the St. Paul delegation was nothing more than the mouthpiece of James J. Hill, who, they hinted, likes conservation only so far as it means conservation of the things that Mr. Hill owns. They said that an attempt was being made to put on the program Judge C. Handford of Seattle, who is an enemy of conservation in all forms."

It is too bad that there should be an attempt to cast any reflection on the bonafides of Governor Eberhart's devotion to conservation but notoriously these national conservation boomers are a suspicious lot.

The Governorship.

If the weather wasn't so warm I could go ahead and write a book about what is being said about the gubernatorial situation both from the Republican and Democratic point of view, and from the point of view of the Republican and the Democratic state insurgents both of whom are growing in numbers. But what's the use? No one would be much the wiser after I got through. It's enough to say that the whole thing is the worst tangle ever, and there is every present prospect that both parties are going to be torn up the back and no one can tell what will come out of it. However, as I was in the Ryan Lobby the other evening before the progressive Republican meeting chatting with an insurging Democratic state senator, an old gentleman, who had also come to attend the meeting interposed, apropos of the possibility that the Democrats would adopt a plank looking to county option, to say that he had just come from having a long talk with "Mr. William Hamm," and Mr. William Hamm had told him that if the Democratic Convention did anything of that kind he would teach them a lesson that they would not be likely to forget in a hurry. The argument the old gentleman made was that if M. Williams Hamm withdrew his support from the Democratic party there wouldn't be enough of it left to hold a convention. I wonder if that is so?

Bemidji Bible Conference.

The Bemidji Bible conference will meet at Bemidji next week, July 24 to 31, for the sixth season. The congress is nonsectarian and interdenominational and a fine program that will attract people interested in the work has been prepared. There will be opportunity also for recreation at the summer resort, Lake Bemidji.

WILL OPEN ABOUT SEPTEMBER FIRST

Farmers National Bank of Red Lake Falls Was Orgsnized This Week.

W. B. Cheshire of Brooks to be Cashier.—A. A. Latendresse Assistant.

Red Lake Falls' new bank, the Farmers National Bank, was organized this week. The stockholders got together on Tuesday and Wednesday and perfected the organization. About thirty of the local business men and farmers are stockholders in the new institution. The stockholders elected the following board of directors: Rev. E. Fayolle, Chas. N. Bourdon, Sam E. Hunt, Joseph Salley, J. E. Argue, W. B. Chesire, L. C. Simons.

The first officers chosen to serve the institution are:

L. C. Simons, President.
Sam E. Hunt, Vice President.
Rev. E. Fayolle, Vice President.
W. B. Cheshire, Cashier.
A. A. Latendresse, Assistant Cashier.

Mr. Cheshire, the cashier, comes from Brooks, where has been cashier of the First State Bank. Before going to Brooks he had charge of a bank at Wylie. The fact that County Auditor A. A. Latendresse is to be the assistant cashier [illegible] were not a few who believed that he would be a candidate for auditor in the election this fall. He will serve out his term of office and will then take up his work in the new bank.

This new bank, having so many well known local people among its stockholders, starts with every promise that it is to be a solid institution. Red Lake Falls already has two banks the growth of which has been the occasion of much satisfaction and with three solid institutions the city will have banking facilities unexcelled in a place the size of Red Lake Falls.
